Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) on 28 March, Official Report, column 572.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies of "Education Means Business" have been printed; what was the cost of publication excluding distribution; what was the distribution cost; how many copies of "Education Means Business" have been distributed; and if he will identify the nature of recipients. [17841]

Mr. Forth: Fifty thousand copies of "Education Means Business" were printed at a total production cost of £101,000. Twenty-nine thousand copies have been distributed to the business community, colleges, universities, schools and local education authorities at a cost of £18,400.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what top-slice percentage was held-back by each local education authority for the administrative services undertaken on behalf of grant-maintained schools for the last year for which figures are available. [17370]

Mr. Robin Squire: Grant-maintained schools are themselves responsible for their own administration. Local education authorities have certain continuing responsibilities for all pupils, whether at grant-maintained or LEA schools. These include home-to-school transport, the education welfare service, and support for pupils with statements of special educational need. The cost of these services in relation to GM school pupils is not collated centrally. However, in the areas where GM secondary schools' budgets are determined by the common funding formula, the percentage of the schools' standard spending assessment attributed to LEA continuing responsibilities in 1995–96 is set out in the table.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will calculate how much extra money per pupil would reach schools in each local education authority if all schools in that local education authority were grant-maintained compared with the position in which none is grant-maintained, in the most recent year for which information is available. [17148]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested cannot readily be calculated. However, the Government remain committed to ensuring that grant-maintained schools receive funding to reflect their additional responsibilities compared with local education authority schools.

In the case of annual maintenance grant, individual secondary LEA schools in authorities in which the common funding formula operates can obtain from the Funding Agency for Schools detailed information on what their budgets for 1995–96 would have been as grant-maintained schools.

Other LEA secondary schools, and all LEA primary schools, can calculate very closely what their budgets for 1995–96 would have been as grant-maintained schools by increasing their budget shares resulting from their LEA's local management of schools scheme by the relevant percentage for central costs, and estimating a level of subsidy for the provision of school meals consistent with the LEA's policy.

Details of this and of the arrangements for special purpose and capital grants to grant-maintained schools are included in the Department's "Grant-Maintained Schools Funding Worksheet," the 1995–96 version of which will be circulated to schools later this month.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the unit cost net of institutional expenditure per primary and secondary school pupil for each of local education authority for 1993–94. [17371]

Mr. Robin Squire: Provisional information on net institutional expenditure per pupil in 1993–94 on LEA-maintained schools is shown in the table. Data for some LEAs are not yet available centrally.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduction if she will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by her Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are her latest estimates for the years 1994- 95 and 1995–96. [17603]

Mr. Forth: The actual costs for the Department's spend on advertising and other publicity—1992–93 and the estimated costs for 1994–95—are given in the table.

Television advertising	0	0	0
Radio advertising	0	29.2	0
Newspaper advertising	1,086.4	1,413.0	159.3
Other promotional material and activities	5,800.1	8,551.3	8,360.7
Total	6,886.5	9,993.5	8,520.0

[1] Estimate.

The budget for departmental publicity in 1995–96 is estimated at £5,530,000. Decisions on media have yet to be made.

The costs for advertising do not include recruitment advertising. The Department's spend on recruitment and recruitment advertising is set out in the following table.

	1992–93	[1]1993–94	1994–95
Recruitment and recruitment advertising	150.8	296.5	218.9

[1] Estimate.

The Department's budget for recruitment and recruitment advertising in 1995–96 is estimated at some £145,000.

Special Needs (Research)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research her Department has funded into the differing levels of children with special educational needs in different areas; and if she will make a statement. [17218]

Mr. Forth: No academic research on variations in the incidence of special educational needs has been funded by the Department for Education. The Department has, however, sponsored research into aspects of several types of learning difficulty, although not their incidence.

The Office for Standards in Education also monitors special educational provision and practice in schools throughout the country.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Police Authority

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the chairman of the Northern Ireland police authority has communicated directly with individual members of the RUC in respect of his community consultation. [17050]

Sir John Wheeler: I understand that the chairman has written to every serving officer in the regular RUC and the RUC reserve, full-time and part-time, to explain the police authority's community consultation process and its view of the future. He has also written to the civilian staff.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what formal invitations to present oral or written evidence to his community consultation the chairman of the Northern Ireland police authority has issued to Northern Ireland's constitutional political parties, the various RUC staff associations, the trade unions, the churches and employers' organisations. [17049]

Sir John Wheeler: I understand that the chairman of the authority has written to each Member of Parliament and each local council in Northern Ireland seeking their written views on the future of policing in the Province, by 2 May 1995. Written views have also been sought from the staff associations and organisations referred to, together with a wide range of community groups. In addition, the authority is in the process of holding a series of informal discussion seminars on policing, at venues throughout Northern Ireland, which all locally elected representatives and representatives from local businesses, churches, schools, charities and community groups have been invited to attend.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the requirement by the chairman of the Northern Ireland police authority in terms of full-time and part-time staff engaged in his community consultation exercise; what has been the total number of man days expended; and whether he is eligible for extra remuneration or allowances in respect of the exercise. [17047]

Sir John Wheeler: I understand that three members of staff within the authority's existing personnel complement have been deployed directly on the community consultation programme. A number of tasks have been undertaken by other authority personnel as part of their existing overall remit. No additional staff have been employed by the police authority as a result of the community consultation exercise.

It is not possible to calculate precisely how many man hours have been expended on the project to date by all staff in the authority; however, the three units of staff directly employed on the project have expended a total of 67 working days up to 17 March 1995.

The chairman does not receive extra remuneration or allowances in respect of the exercise.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has received from the chairman of the Northern Ireland police authority on how the evidence given during his community consultation is to be verified, collated and assessed; when the exercise is to be completed; and what is the next stage in the process. [17051]

Sir John Wheeler: The chairman of the authority has kept my officials fully informed about each stage of the consultation process. I understand that the first stage of the consultation process ends on 2 May 1995, by which date all submissions should be received in writing by the authority.

The second stage involves the submissions being examined and, where appropriate, organisations or individuals being invited to expand or explain their submissions in further detail, either in writing or in an oral submission. The second stage should be completed by October or November. However, this stage of the process will be dependent, to a large extent, on the total number of submissions received and their content. Submissions are currently being analysed by authority officials and information is being collated. Once all the submissions have been reviewed, the third stage of the process will be implemented; this will involve preparing a written report for the Chief Constable and the Secretary of State. The authority hopes to issue a report by the end of this year or at the beginning of 1996.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total cost of the various elements in the chairman of the Northern Ireland police authority's community consultation exercise, including all printing, postage, administration and public hearings, up to 17 March. [17048]

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of the community consultation process up to 17 March amounts to £72,012.11, excluding VAT. This does not include staff costs, as the authority did not recruit additional personnel for the exercise.

Anaphylaxis

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients in Northern Ireland, have been diagnosed as suffering from food-induced anaphylaxis, peanut allergy. [17013]

Mr. Moss: The information is not available in the form requested. During the year 1993–94, there were 32 admissions to hospital of patients suffering from anaphylactic shock. This figure would include any cases induced by peanut allergy.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of (a) teachers and (b) auxiliary school staff in Northern Ireland who are employed on a temporary basis, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17764]

Mr. Ancram: The information regarding teachers is as follows:

1991–92	186	1.0
1989–90	154	0.8

Figures for auxiliary school staff in controlled and maintained schools are available for 1994–95 only and comprised 1,446 temporary staff—29 per cent. of the total.

Information for auxiliary staff in voluntary grammar schools is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of NHS staff in Northern Ireland who are employed on a temporary basis, breaking the date down into (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) medical and dental staff, (c) ambulance staff, (d) ancillary staff and (e) managers and administrative staff, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17759]

Mr. Moss: The information is set out in the following table.

Figures for auxiliary school staff in controlled and maintained schools are available for 1994–95 only and comprised 1,446 temporary staff—29 per cent. of the total.

Information for auxiliary staff in voluntary grammar schools is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Moss: The information is set out in the following table.

Prisoners (Irish Nationals)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Irish nationals are serving custodial sentences in Her Majesty's prisons in Northern Ireland; and what obstacles are preventing them from being transferred to prisons in the Irish Republic. [17661]

Sir John Wheeler: This information is not readily available as statistics are not kept on Irish nationals. The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what area of Northern Ireland is designated as being environmentally sensitive, how much Government funding is spent annually on environmentally sensitive areas; how this formula is calculated; and if he will make a statement. [17794]

Mr. Ancram: There are five ESAs in Northern Ireland covering 220,000 hectares or about 20 per cent. of the agricultural land area. Payments covering agreements with participating farmers will build up over the next three years. The financial provision for 1997–98 is £5.104 million which reflects anticipated maximum uptake of 65 per cent. of the designated land area. Payment rates reflect income forgone and costs incurred by participating farmers in meeting the requirements of the scheme.

HEALTH

Day Care Services

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's latest estimate of the total level of public expenditure on day care services by local authority area for children under the age of five; and what this sum is per child. [16130]

Mr. Bowis: Information on expenditure per child, by authority, is published in "Key Indicators of Local Authority Social Services", copies of which are available in the Library.

The latest available information on total expenditure by local authorities covering 1992–93 on day care, child minding facilities and playgroups will be placed in the Library. These figures do not give an indication of the true level of services in a particular area as such services have historically developed in different ways in different authorities.

General Practitioner Working Hours

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the number of hours worked on average by general practitioners since 1979. [16422]

Mr. Malone: The earliest available information is for 1985–86 and the most recent for 1992–93. Over this period, average general practitioners' working hours increased by 13 per cent., from 34.4 to 38.8 hours a week. Some of this increase is attributable to the reclassification of time spent attending educational courses as general medical services.

If time spent on-call but not working is included, the average commitment has reduced by 5 per cent., from 61.9 hours a week in 1985–86 to 58.8 hours a week in 1992–93.

General Medical Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she will inform the House when next she intends to seek nominations for lay members of the General Medical Council. [16223]

Mr. Malone: I will consider how best to proceed at the appropriate time.

General Practitioner Pay

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change in general practitioners' salaries there has been in real terms since 1979. [16423]

Mr. Malone: For 1994–95, the average general practitioner will earn £41,890 for the provision of general medical services— a real terms increase of 40 per cent. over 1978–79. The average GP also receives an extra £3,150 for achieving higher target levels of coverage for childhood immunisations and cervical cytology screening.

NHS Directors of Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will list the health authorities and trusts whose directors of finance do not hold a recognised accountancy qualification. [16243]

Mr. Malone: Such information about individuals employed in national health service health authorities and trusts is held only on a management-in-confidence basis. In early 1994, guidance was issued by the then national health service management executive on "The Role of the Director of Finance in the NHS". Among other things, that guidance commended appointment of future directors of finance from those holding qualifications recognised by the Consultative Committee of the Accounting Bodies. Copies of that guidance are available in the Library.

Cancer Research

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of health service funds are dedicated to cancer research; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on appeals by health research charities for funds from the public. [16940]

Mr. Malone: Figures are not collected centrally on the proportion of health service funds dedicated to cancer research.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment.

In 1992–93, the MRC spent a total of £13.5 million on cancer research. These figures would rise by a considerable amount if a proportion of the MRC's spend on basic medical research, that may yield results relevant to cancer, were included.

The Department of Health spends some £7.7 million annually on research into cancer. This supports a programme of work on radiation protection, work at the National Radiation Protection Board, the small area health statistics unit and the cancer screening evaluation unit.

The Government support the work of the medical research charities and recognise that charities are important funders of health and medical research. The Department is working with the Association of Medical Research Charities to promote a better understanding of the charities' strategies and priorities. In cancer research, the Department is funding research in collaboration with research charities, such as the Imperial Cancer Research Fund and the Cancer Research Campaign.

Advisory Group on Direct Payments

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the membership of her technical advisory group on direct payments. [17061]

Mr. Bowis: This informal group will be a source of practical expertise, to assist the Department in progressing this important issue. The membership may therefore need to vary to reflect the issues being discussed. Its initial membership will include relevant Government Departments, local authorities' associations, social services directors, potential users of direct payments and their representatives.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hospitals for the mentally handicapped have closed since 1966; [17189]

(2) how many hospitals for the mentally handicapped are due to close in the next five years. [17190]

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not routinely collect information on hospital closures. Information is available centrally on proposals to close, or change the use of, health service facilities which are referred to Ministers for decision following objections from a community health council.

A recent report of a survey by Inter-Authority Comparisons and Consultancy showed that of 106 mental handicap hospitals with 100 or more beds at December 1960, 62 had been closed or replaced and 44 remained open in March 1994. The report identified a further 11 hospitals with 100 or more beds and four with 75 to 100 beds which had opened during the period. Of the total of 59 hospitals with over 75 beds at March 1994, 42 had plans to close by 2000 as alternative community-based health and social services are developed. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Local Pay Bargaining

Mr. Dafydd Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will suspend for 12 months any decision on local pay bargaining in the NHS, to allow further negotiations with representatives of affected parties; and if she will deliver a full 3 per cent. pay increase across the board to all NHS staff who were subject to local pay bargaining proposals for the year 1995–96. [17225]

Mr. Malone: No.

Message Handling Service

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made in the testing of the message handling service being offered by BT Syntegra scheduled to take place between August and December 1994; [17683]

(2) when she expects the message handling service being provided by BT Syntegra to be fully available to the NHS; and what are the expected cost savings; [17684]

(3) what is the cost to her Department of the procurement of the message handling service; [17686]

(4) how the message handling service of the NHS is currently being provided; which company provides this service; and how many users subscribe to this network. [17685]

Mr. Sackville: There are currently two message handling services available to the national health service: one provided by Syntegra and the Healthlink service provided by Racal Data Networks Ltd. The cost of procuring the Healthlink service in 1989–90 by single tender negotiations is estimated at £450,000. The cost of the competitive procurement which resulted in the award of a contract to Syntegra in 1994 is estimated to be £517,000.

As at 1 March 1995, there were about 6,500 subscribers to Healthlink, the majority being general practitioners and dentists. At present, there are about 350 subscribers to Syntegra's MHS.

The Department has successfully completed technical testing of the main components of Syntegra's MHS. User acceptance testing is currently taking place and is scheduled to be completed by the end of April 1995. This activity will therefore be completed approximately 12 weeks after the agreed target date. A number of technical issues were encountered early in the testing which has caused the original timetable to be extended.

The various elements of Syntegra MHS are being introduced over the coming months. The basic messaging service is currently undergoing user acceptance trials, and early users of messaging services will be able to connect to it from April 1995 onwards. Use of the service by family health services authorities will be piloted in May and June, installed in early sites in July to September, then become generally available from October 1995 onwards. Electronic data interchange will become progressively available from the summer of 1995. The Syntegra MHS is an advanced system, offering the latest standards in messaging. The Department and Syntegra have insisted on all aspects of the service being thoroughly tested and piloted before being made available for general use. This policy means that a reliable operational service will be made available at the planned dates.

It is anticipated that cost savings to the NHS from use of Syntegra's MHS, based on the best current projections of service usage and the costs of the two services at August 1994, will be in the range of £70 million to £130 million over seven years compared with the existing Healthlink service.

Community Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the proposal for a minimum standard of mental health services in the Community Care (Rights to Mental Health Services) Bill. [17361]

Mr. Bowis: The introduction of prescriptive legislation for a minimum standard of mental health services is not the right approach as decisions about the provision of appropriate care in the community are best made locally in the light of local needs, priorities and resources rather than dictated centrally.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the professional bodies to the Community Care (Rights to Mental Health Services) Bill. [17362]

Mr. Bowis: We have received representations from the Royal College of Nursing.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the outcome of the consultations between the NHS and local councils on the need for each aspect of community care; and if she will make a statement. [17407]

Mr. Bowis: As a precondition for receiving their community care special transitional grant in 1993–94 and 1994–95, local social services authorities have been required to reach agreements with health authorities on a number of community care issues. For 1995–96, the pre-conditions include taking into account the continuing care guidance issued in February 1995.

Health authorities and social services departments are required to work together to develop services in the community based on individual assessment of need. Many local authorities and health authorities produce joint community care plans.

Dental Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the number of people taking dental examinations since the abolition of the free dental examination. [17363]

Mr. Malone: The information available centrally is the number of courses of treatment for adults that either consist of, or include, dental examinations. This information is shown in the table.

General dental service: number of national health service dental examinations for adult patients in courses of treatment claimed for in the financial years 1987–88 to 1993–94 in England

1988–89	20,904
1989–90	19,402
1990–91	18,951
1991–92	19,548
1992–93	20,000
1993–94	19,488

Dental Practice Board.

Notes:

1. The Charge for dental examinations was introduced for courses of treatment commencing on or after 1 January 1989. The table relates to courses of treatment claimed for by dentists in the financial year. Because of the time lag between courses of treatment starting and finishing a large number of free examinations will be included in the financial year 1988–89. Some free examinations will be included in later years' figures.

2. The figures for examinations are the totals of items 1a and 1b in the statement of dental remuneration.

3. Numbers estimated from a 5 per cent. sample of courses of treatment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made on the effect of the introduction of a sessional fees system for dentists on the number of dentists leaving the NHS system. [17364]

Mr. Malone: The sessional model was one of the options outlined in the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry". We are considering the responses from the consultation, and hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to include dental policy and practice as part of "The Health of the Nation" planning and documents. [17365]

Mr. Malone: Oral health has been considered alongside the strategy for improving health set out in "The Health of the Nation". "An Oral Health Strategy for England", published in July 1994, reviewed the present state of oral health in England, identified problem areas and suggested in broad terms how these might be tackled. Both the contents of this document and decisions taken following the consultation of the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry" will inform policy on how best to achieve future improvements in oral health.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 741, if she will place in the Library the correspondence relating to her proposal to reduce Manchester's AIDS support programme. [17580]

(2) if she will now rescind her proposal to reduce Manchester's AIDS support programme. [17507]

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the correspondence will be placed in the Library. Having considered Manchester's request for additional funding, I have decided to make an extra £100,000 available to Manchester city council in excess of the indicative allocation of £75,000 notified earlier this year.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the Internet electronic mail addresses for (a) her Department and (b) each Minister in her Department; and if she will make a statement on her Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17730]

Mr. Sackville: The Department and Ministers do not have Internet electronic mailboxes. Although officials are using the Internet to retrieve information and to communicate with the research, medical and scientific community, public electronic mail access is still under consideration. The Department is considering how best to exploit the information super-highway to disseminate and retrieve information and to communicate with external organisations and members of the public without risking the security of confidential or personal information and at minimum administrative cost.

Teenage Pregnancies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her policies for ensuring that progress is made in meeting "The Health of the Nation" targets on teenage pregnancies. [17409]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 14 February, Official Report, columns 640–41.

The Government continue to work closely with health authorities and voluntary organisations towards achieving "The Health of the Nation" target to reduce under-16 conceptions by 50 per cent. by 2000.

Traffic Calming Measures

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will call for a report from the Hillingdon hospital trust on the ease of road access to the hospital from the surrounding areas of West Drayton, Yiewsley, Hillingdon and Uxbridge; and if she will satisfy herself that the construction of road humps in many streets is not leading to the death of patients admitted in emergency cases. [17421]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Transport recently issued a code of practice—Traffic Advisory Leaflet No. 3-94—setting out arrangements for consultation between highway authorities and the emergency services when traffic calming measures are proposed. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Martin Gorham, chief executive of the London ambulance service to establish what consultation was carried out before the recent introduction of traffic calming measures in the area around Hillingdon hospital.

Long-term Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 13 December 1994, Official Report, columns 615–16, if she will collect information of the savings made since April 1993 by the national health service by transferring the funding of continuing care of elderly people to local authorities. [17508]

Mr. Bowis: Local and health authorities are responsible for agreeing their responsibilities for continuing care. They should agree the information which they need locally to identify and monitor respective financial commitments in this area. Health authorities can transfer funds to local authorities under section 28a of the National Health Service Act 1977 but it is not clear how this would result in savings to the NHS.

Junior Doctors' Hours

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the average and maximum weekly number of hours on duty and on call for junior hospital doctors. [17384]

Mr. Malone: Junior hospital doctors contract to work a standard week of 40 hours. The majority of them also contract for a number of additional duty hours, which may vary from contract to contract.

The maximum weekly hours of duty including additional duty hours are laid down in "The New Deal", copies of which are available in the Library. Since 1 January, these are 56 hours for those on full shifts, 64 hours for those working partial shifts, 72 hours for those in hard-pressed on-call posts and 83 hours for those in non-hard-pressed on-call posts. Maximum average hours of work are, regardless of the contracted working pattern, 56 a week.

The medical and dental work-force census for England and Wales shows that at 30 September 1993, the average contracted hours of full-time junior doctors and dentists who contract for additional duty hours was 75.2 a week.

Average hours of work, as opposed to contracted hours, are not held centrally. However, the 23rd report of the Review Body on Doctors and Dentists Remuneration, copies of which are available in the Library, contained the results of an independent survey of junior doctors and dentists in Great Britain which show that average hours of work were, in October 1993, 53.4 a week.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by her Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment her Department has made of their effectiveness. [17379]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate costs. There are a number of such lines to help the public with advice on health issues.

Hospices

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health authorities met the target for joint funding of hospices in the last three years; and if she will make a statement; [17550]

(2) what was the total expenditure by health authorities in England on hospices in each of the last three years in (a) cash terms and (b) in constant 1995 prices. [17549]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. Funding allocated centrally for hospices and specialist palliative care services for the three years 1992–93 to 1994–95 is shown in the table. These figures do not include additional funding of specialist palliative care by health authorities from their general allocations. Information on the number of health authorities who have met the target of matched national health service and voluntary funding for hospices is not available centrally.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the banning of the use of electro-convulsive therapy on children under the age of 16 years; what reply she is making; and if she will make a statement. [17471]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on 9 March, column 319.

NHS Staff

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each of the past five years, the number of NHS staff in England who are employed on a temporary basis, breaking the data down into (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) medical and dental staff, (c) ambulance staff, (d) ancillary staff and (e) managers and administrative staff, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17760]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 31 March, column 815, which gave information on nursing and midwifery bank staff. Information is not available centrally about other staff employed on a temporary basis.

Sight Tests

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received calling for the reintroduction of free tests for pensioners; what her response has been; and if she will make a statement. [17979]

Mr. Malone: We have received and are considering a copy of the Association of Optometrists and British Medical Association's joint document "Free Eye Examinations For the Over-65s", which calls for the re-instatement of national health service eye examinations for that group.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 131, whether she will make it her policy to continue to place in the Library information about the number and percentage of emergency ambulance calls in London that took (a) 14 minutes and (b) each subsequent minute up to 70 minutes in February and subsequent months as they become available. [17864]

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member should contact Mr. Martin Gorham, chief executive of the London ambulance service, for this information.

Accident and Emergency Services, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the accident and emergency services in Liverpool hospitals. [17980]

Mr. Sackville: Substantial investment is being made reorganising and improving accident and emergency services in Liverpool. In the transition, arrangements are being made to ensure that safe and effective services are maintained. The provision of such services is a local matter and the hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, chairman of Liverpool health authority, for details.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax during the financial year ended 31 March; and if he will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) whether any offers carried conditions as to destination, (c) the date in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) how much of this total was covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the reserve in accordance with the Government policy announced on 2 July 1985, Official Report, column, 779. [16753]

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

The total expenditure for the financial year 1994–95 was £6,160,116. This includes an additional payment of £2,041.74 for the painting, "Weeping Woman" by Picasso which was accepted in 1986–87. Five offers costing £3,759,616 were met by calls on the reserve.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the attendance figures for the financial year ended 31 March reported by the national museums and galleries for which he is responsible, broken down into the individual institutions, but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for the preceding year. [16754]

Mr. Dorrell: I list forecasts for the number of visits to the 11 national museums and galleries in England for which I am responsible for the financial year ended 31 March 1995 and the actual figures for the financial year 1993–94. More accurate figures for 1994–95 will be available in July.

It is not possible to identify the number of visits to the Royal Armouries because it at present forms part of the Tower of London.

National Lottery

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review the distribution mechanisms for the proceeds of the national lottery. [17223]

Mr. Dorrell: The distribution mechanisms are as set out in the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 and can be changed only by Parliament.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to instruct Oflot to examine the profits of Camelot. [17222]

Mr. Dorrell: I have no such plans.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pig Research Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the cost of market testing his Department's pig unit; [16962]

(2) which consultants were employed to advise on the market testing of his Department's pig unit; and at what cost; [16963]

(3) how many (a) pig and (b) staff were included in the scope of his Department's market test of the pig unit; [16964]

(4) how many bids from the private sector were received following the issuing of the invitation to tender for his Department's pig unit work; [16965]

(5) if the market testing of the Government's pig research unit falls within the remit of his "Competing for Quality" initiative; and if he will make a statement. [16958]

Mr. Waldegrave: I have asked the chief executive of the Central Veterinary Laboratory to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from T.W.A. Little to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 3 April 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the Department's Pig Unit. I am also replying to your question to the Prime Minister concerning the Government Pig Research Unit.

I should perhaps begin by explaining that there is no single Government Pig Research Unit. However, at CVL the Animal Services Unit is responsible for the procurement, housing and welfare of animals used on site in connection with the work of the Laboratory on animal health and welfare. In 1993 it was decided to market test that part of the operation responsible for the supply of animals of known health status. This involved the supply of pigs as well as other animals. The planned approach was to invite potential tenderers to either run the service on site, using CVL's existing facilities, or to supply from their own facilities off-site.

The response to advertisements for expressions of interest for the supply of animals was disappointing. Too few organisations replied who had sufficient track record to meet all the Laboratory's needs. Against this background the market test was not pursued in favour of an internal management review which concluded that supplies should continue to be arranged in-house but with occasional use of out-sourced suppliers.

Turning to your specific questions, I am unable to provide you with a cost for that aspect of the exercise which related to the supply of pigs since these costs were not kept separately. I can confirm no consultants were involved at any stage of the market testing exercise.

That part of the unit supplying pigs comprised approximately 3 boars, 30 sows and followers. Two members of staff were involved for most of their time with limited supervisory input. As explained above, no bids were invited since the exercise did not reach the stage of inviting tenders.

Meat Hygiene Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the setting up of the national meat hygiene service. [17276]

Mr. Waldegrave: Secondary legislation has been laid before the House which would, among other things, make Ministers, acting through the meat hygiene service responsible for enforcement of meat hygiene and welfare at slaughter legislation. The necessary arrangements have been made to allow the meat hygiene service to carry out its responsibilities with effect from 1 April when these regulations come into force.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the total administrative cost of setting up the national meat hygiene service to date and if he will indicate any further expenditure that will be necessary in establishing this agency. [17272]

Mr. Waldegrave: Provision was made for a total of £5.2 million in the years 1994–95 and 1995–96 to meet the set up costs of the meat hygiene service. In addition, a small project team was established within the Ministry between 1992 and March 1995 at an estimated total cost of £626,000.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the representations he has received concerning the national meat hygiene service. [17278]

Mr. Waldegrave: My ministerial colleagues and I have had frequent meetings with hon. Members and organisations representing the meat industry to discuss the meat hygiene service. We have also received letters from hon. Members and others both supporting and opposing the creation of the MHS.

I met 11 representative organisations on 27 March; 10 of them confirmed their continuing support for the creation of a single organisation to be responsible for meat hygiene enforcement and inspection.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the methods by which the national meat hygiene service will be held accountable to the House. [17274]

Mr. Waldegrave: The meat hygiene service will be an agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and its staff will be civil servants. I will be accountable to Parliament for the activities of the agency. Full authority for the day to day operation of the agency rests with the chief executive who will be responsible to me for the agency's overall operation and performance. The MHS will operate in Scotland and Wales on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State.

Ministers will usually ask the chief executive to write to hon. Members in response to written Parliamentary questions and letters about matters delegated to him. The chief executive's letters in reply to parliamentary questions will be published in the Official Report.

The agency's annual report and accounts will be laid in the House.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the senior officers, (b) the salaries of the senior officers and (c) the salaries of each grade of staff in the national meat hygiene service. [17277]

Mr. Waldegrave: The meat hygiene service is headed by a chief executive supported by four heads of Department. There are six regional managers. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 14 March 1995 to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill), Official Report, column 500, for details of the chief executive's remuneration. Meat inspectors and other staff transferring from local authorities will do so on terms and conditions broadly equivalent to those of their previous employment. The salaries given for these grades are those which will be offered to new staff on appointment.

Grade	Range (£s)
Heads of Department	38,000—50,000
Regional Manager	37,500—43,000
Official Veterinary Surgeon	22,000—35,000
Headquarters Manager	16,000—30,000
Area Resource Manager	19,000—28,000
Meat Hygiene Inspector	11,000—23,000
Executive Assistant	7,500—13,000

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the annual total cost to public funds of the national meat hygiene service. [17273]

Mr. Waldegrave: The estimated net cost of the meat hygiene service in 1995–96 is £15.4 million. This includes provision for the transitional assistance which I announced on 29 March and elements, such as start-up costs and normal delays in payment, which are not relevant to the agency's operational costs. The estimated net cost in 1996–97 is £1.4 million.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions he has put in place to assist with maintaining operations in small abattoirs following the setting up of the national meat hygiene service. [17279]

Mr. Waldegrave: We have always recognised the importance of local abattoirs to the rural economy and have taken a number of measures to ensure that single market rules are applied sensibly and flexibly. These arrangements will continue. The transitional assistance which I announced on 29 March will be of particular benefit to the smaller operator.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact the national meat hygiene service will have for the training requirements of environmental health officers; and if environmental health officers will continue to be required to gain qualifications in meat inspection.

Mr. Waldegrave: The meat hygiene service will assist in providing training for environmental health officers.

Environmental health officers authorised to exercise powers under the Food Safety Act 1990 to examine and seize meat must hold one of the qualifications listed in the schedule to the Authorised Officers (Meat Inspection) Regulations 1987.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the necessary qualifications for appointment to each grade of staff in the national meat hygiene service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Management and support staff are required to have the appropriate skills and experience. The head of operations post requires a veterinarian with substantial professional experience of meat hygiene and regional managers must have substantial practical experience of meat hygiene. Official veterinary surgeons must be members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and be designated by Ministers as official veterinary surgeons having completed the appropriate refresher training in fresh meat or poultry meat hygiene. Meat hygiene inspectors must have the qualifications specified in the regulations governing meat hygiene.

Fishing Boats

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to verify the size of fishing fleet claims of other member states of the European Union, where such claims have an effect on the size of the fleet the United Kingdom is permitted to run under EU rules; and if he will make a statement. [17091]

Mr. Jack: Each member state has agreed binding multi-annual guidance programme targets. Responsibility for compliance with these targets and the enforcement of Community regulations and verification of the data supplied by member states is the responsibility of the Commission.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food if he will discuss with his Spanish counterpart and with the European Fisheries Commissioner the regulations of the common fisheries policy governing declarations of fishing boat engine size; and if he will make a statement. [17092]

Mr. Jack: Responsibility for ensuring compliance with Community regulations rests with the Commission. However, my officials are drawing the recent press reports on these matters to the attention of the Commission. Evaluation of effort is sometimes discussed in the Council when all member states can contribute to the proceedings.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17454]

Mr. Jack: MAFF has set up two public telephone helpline services with local call rate charging facilities. The general MAFF helpline, launched in May 1993, provides a one-stop point of contact for individuals or organisations seeking information about or advice from the Ministry. The more specialist consumer helpline was set up in April 1990 to act as a focal point for enquirers needing information from the food safety directorate. Both units also handle written and faxed public enquiries, and in the case of the MAFF helpline, those received by e-mail. The start-up costs for these services were approximately £21,000, and annual running costs are estimated at £90,000. Since the introduction of both services, over 62,000 calls have been received. The effectiveness of the helpline services are measured by regular annual increases in the volume of calls dealt with, by the high proportion of calls handled directly without onward referral and by their success in meeting citizens charter targets on the way in which they deal with inquirers and the time limits for response.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many environmentally sensitive area agreements were concluded in 1994-95 in the (a) zero to £5,000, (b) £5,001 to £10,000, (c) £10,001 to £15,000, (d) £15,001 to £20,000, (e) 20,001 to £25,000 (f) £25,001 to £50,000, (g) £50,001 to £75,000, (h) £75,001 to £100,000, (i) £100,001 to £150,000, (j) 150,001 to £200,000 and (k) over £200,000 bands; [17674]

(2) how many environmentally sensitive area agreements were concluded in 1993–94 in the (a) zero to £5,000, (b) £5,001 to £10,000, (c) £10,001 to £15,000, (d) £15,001 to £20,000, (e) 20,001 to £25,000 (f) £25,001 to £50,000, (g) £50,001 to £75,000, (h) £75,001 to £100,000, (i) £100,001 to £150,000, (j) 150,001 to £200,000 and (k) over £200,000 bands; [17673]

(3) how many environmentally sensitive area agreements he estimates will be concluded in 1995–96 in the (a) zero to £5,000, (b) £5,001 to £10,000, (c) £10,001 to £15,000, (d) £15,001 to £20,000, (e) 20,001 to £25,000 (f) £25,001 to £50,000, (g) £50,001 to £75,000, (h) £75,001 to £100,000, (i) £100,001 to £150,000, (j) 150,001 to £200,000 and (k) over £200,000 bands. [17675]

Mr. Jack: Records of the number of agreements concluded in 1993–94 are not kept in the form requested. The total number of agreements on which payments were made in English ESAs in each band is as follows:

0–5,000	3,554	4,206
5,001–10,000	543	653
10,001–15,000	146	185
15,001–20,000	52	65
20,001–25,000	28	42
25,001–50,000	56	75
50,001–75,000	10	10
75,001–100,000	3	5
100,001–150,000	2	0

Entry to the ESA scheme is voluntary and it is not possible to predict the number of new agreements that will be concluded in 1995–96 in the form requested.

Live Exports

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the approximate cost to the Exchequer of subsidies to United Kingdom producers of live animals for export for slaughter in the latest convenient period for which figures can be calculated. [17462]

Mr. Jack: For live animals exported for slaughter from the United Kingdom in the period 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994, nil.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an assessment of the consequences for farming and the countryside, including the budgetary and trade implications, if the United Kingdom were to withdraw from the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement. [17969]

Mr. Jack: There can be no question of the United Kingdom withdrawing from the common agricultural policy, participation in which is an integral part of our membership of the European Union.

Sow Stall Conversions

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are available to pig farmers in Northern Ireland to assist with sow stall conversions. [14798]

Mr. Ancram: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently no grants available in Northern Ireland to assist in sow stall conversion.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Order Prosecutions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been under (i) section 18, (ii) section 19 and (iii) section 23 of the Public Order Act 1986 in each year since 1990. [17860]

The Attorney-General: Since 1990, 12 prosecutions have been commenced under part III of the Public Order Act 1986. Information on each of the prosecutions is as follows:

	Year	Offence(s)	Result
1.	1990	Sections 19 and 23	Convicted
2.	1990	Section 23	Convicted
3.	1991	Section 19	Convicted
4.	1991	Section 18	Died before trial
5.	1991	Section 23	Discontinued
6.	1992	Section 23	Convicted
7.	1992	Section 23	Convicted
8.	1992	Section 18	Acquitted
9.	1993	Sections 19 and 23	Convicted
10.	1993	Section 23	Convicted
11.	1993	Section 23	Convicted
12.	1994	Section 23	Convicted

Date-rape Cases

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations he has had with the Director of the Crown Prosecution Services concerning the numbers of date-rape cases dropped on Crown Prosecution Service advice after a full police investigation, as a proportion of all date-rape cases arriving at court. [17994]

The Attorney-General: I have routine meetings with the DPP to discuss departmental issues, including aspects of prosecutions policy. The particular information sought by the hon. Member is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Parliamentary Data and Video Network

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what financial provision is being made for installing the parliamentary data and video network; when this will be completed; and if the Commission will be providing funds for terminals and computers. [15725]

Mr. Channon: By the end of the summer recess 550 Members, including all those with offices in the outbuildings, will have access to the video network. Remaining Members' offices in the Palace will be cabled progressively over the next five years. In accordance with the recommendations of the Information Committee approved by the House last June, terminals and computers will not be funded from the House votes.

Visitors' Refreshment Facilities

36. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee what plans he has to provide increased refreshment facilities within or adjacent to Westminster Hall for members of the public visiting the House. [15727]

Mr. Channon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell).

Members' Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is his latest estimate of the total cost of hon. Members moving office within parliamentary buildings during the current Parliament.

Mr. Beith: No figures are available to identify separately the total cost of moving hon. Members between offices but the cost of removal for an individual Member has been estimated at approximately £50 plus VAT, together with any extra costs caused by new furniture, furnishings or redecoration.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the number of staff years which have been used by Departments in order to progress market testing since April 1992. [16971]

Mr. Horam: None.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what considerations underlie his decision to publish information on service quality following a market testing exercise only when the quality has risen. [16970]

Mr. Horam: There has been no such decision.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the costs of operating the (a) 0800 100101 and (b) 0345 300130 telephone services to the citizens charter unit; what was the total number of calls made to each line during its operation; what were the costs of establishing, publicising and operating each service; and what assessment his Department has made of these services. [17797]

Mr. Horam: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the costs of operating the citizens charter publication line; what was the number of calls made to it for each month of its operation; what were the costs of establishing, publicising and operating this service; and what assessment his Department has made of this service. [17799]

Mr. Horam: The citizens charter publication line on 0345 22 32 42 was set up on 16 March to send out copies of the guide to the citizens charter White Papers; details of how to obtain the follow-up charters; the code of practice on access to Government information; charter mark award scheme information; "Charter News"; and complaints task force information. The service remains in operation; calls are charged at a local rate. Initially the service was managed by IBM national call centre. When the contract expired the service was run directly by the charter unit until 17 October 1994, then a new contract was awarded to Inform Communications who have managed the publications line since then.

The costs of operating the publication line and the number of calls up to 16 March 1995 are:

Period covered	Number of calls	Operating costs (excluding VAT) £	Set up costs[1] £	Managed by
16 March 1994–10 July 1994[2]	5,160	23,204.59	1,420.00	IBM National Call Centre
11 July 1994–16 August 1994	405	absorbed within Charter unit running costs		Citizen's Charter Unit
17 August 1994–16 September 1994	132
17 September 1994–16 October 1994	145
17 October 1994–16 November 1994	432	1,654.22	640.00	Inform Communications
7 November 1994–16 December 1994	250	1,044.12
17 December 1994–16 January 1995	120	753.55
17 January 1995–16 February 1995	451	1,453.55
17 February 1995–16 March 1995	480	1,394.35

Note:

[1] One-off costs.

[2] The time period covers the IBM management of the Publication Line.

The telephone number for the publication line was publicised in the citizens charter second report, 1994 and other internal newsletters and magazines; no specific publicity costs have been incurred.

The service is kept under continuous review, and decisions about continuation and contractual arrangements are made accordingly.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the costs of operating the charterline telephone information service; what was the number of calls made to it for each month of its operation; what were the costs of establishing, publicising and operating this service; and what assessment his Department has made of this service. [17798]

Mr. Horam: The cost of operating the charterline information service from 19 May 1993—the setting up of the pilot scheme—to 19 March 1994, the ending of the evaluation of the pilot scheme was £1,130,991.

During this period, charterline received 5,603 calls. A month-by-month breakdown of this number is not available.

The breakdown of the costs of the pilot scheme until 19 March 1994 is as follows:

	Developmental costs (£)	Ongoing costs (£)
Initial research	67,000	—
Set up charges	749,000	—
System Design	119,918	—
Project planning and management	19[illegible],[illegible]00	—
Selection of pilot region	[illegible]5,000	—
Regional seminars	[illegible]1,000	—
Data collection	57,000	—
Detailed requirements, acceptance testing and financial modelling	50,520	—
CCTA contractual advice	47,761	—
Advertising	—	602,922
Research during pilot study	—	61,239
IBM operational costs	—	403,579
Charterline language service (set up and operational charges)	—	34,951
CACI use of ACORN data	—	28,300
Totals	1,332,199	1,130,991

This information, together with other data on the charterline pilot is contained in the document "Charterline Evaluation Report", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Paragraphs 41–44 of the evaluation report set out the conclusions at the end of the study. The evaluation showed what information people wanted to know about their public services but also that there were problems with doing this through charterline because of the lack of awareness of the service. In the light of these conclusions, it was decided that charterline should not be continued, and the pilot scheme ended on 6 May 1995. Subsequently, the charter unit has worked with Yellow Pages and Thomson Directories to develop the information on public services that they provide in their directories.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17038]

Mr. David Hunt: Any analysis could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member.

Charter Marks

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the budget for the 1995 charter mark award scheme. [17110]

Mr. Horam: We have provisionally set aside a sum of £1.65 million to cover the cost of the award assessment, the new scheme for public nominations and the wider promotion of the award scheme. But final costs will be heavily dependent on the number of applications received and on the number of public nominations. We will therefore be refining the budget as the year progresses.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much of the budget for the 1995 charter mark award scheme has been spent on (i) publications and (ii) distribution of information. [17109]

Mr. Horam: We think it very important this year to involve the public in the operation of the charter mark award scheme. We also wish to involve a larger proportion of public service organisations in this scheme. We have spent £111,900 of the £1.65 million provisionally set aside for the 1995 charter mark award scheme on publications and £58,500 on distributing those publications.

Cabinet Office

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Cabinet Office was last inspected by the relevant local authority to ensure that it fully complies with health and safety at work legislation; and what steps have been taken to implement any necessary improvements relating to space standards, toilets, rest rooms, canteens and asbestos removal, for staff employed there. [17312]

Mr. Horam: The Cabinet Office and its agencies occupy a number of buildings throughout the country. The buildings concerned are, therefore, subject to different inspection regimes by the respective local council, local fire authority and local environmental health authority. The responsibility for ensuring compliance with the health and safety at work legislation, however, lies with the Health and Safety Executive.

Listed are the latest recorded inspections, since January 1993, for buildings where the Cabinet Office is the major occupier. Good working relations are maintained with all relevant local authorities and a number of informal inspections also take place. Except as noted, there are no outstanding actions still to be taken following any of the inspections listed.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what considerations led to the continued advertising of posts within the civil service to work in the Cabinet Office for two hours a week longer than the proposed European Community directive on maximum hours of work. [17311]

Mr. Horam: The working time directive is not in force. The United Kingdom's challenge to it has yet to be considered by the European Court of Justice. Working hours in the Cabinet Office are agreed between management and staff in the light of particular circumstances, under the guiding principles set out in the civil service management code.

SCOTLAND

Taxation

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the sources and calculations behind his statements in a television interview on 12 February on (a) the extra cost to each Scot in income tax of the Labour party's plans for a Scottish Parliament, (b) the Scottish share of the United Kingdom population and Government expenditure and taxation and (c) the amount raisable by 3p on income tax leviable only in Scotland and (d) the change if Scotland were funded to the same level as the rest of the United Kingdom. [14918]

Mr. Lang: I have arranged to place in the House of Commons Library the sources and calculations behind my statements in my interview with Jonathan Dimbleby on ITV on Sunday 12 February.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish on an annual basis health service clinical outcome indicators for individual (a) health boards and (b) NHS trusts, similar to those published in December 1994. [15867]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Decisions about future publication will be taken in the light of continuing development work and full discussion of the indicators already published.

Public Relations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent on public relations during the financial year 1993–94; how much contracts with the private sector cost; and if he will list the activities covered by these contracts. [16284]

Mr. Lang: The running cost of the Scottish Office information directorate in 1993–94 was £1.4 million. No public relations companies were employed by my Department during that period.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines his Department has issued to its agencies and other public bodies under its authority in respect of the employment of public relations companies and the procedures to be adopted in relation to requesting tenders for public relations companies. [16213]

Mr. Lang: Guidelines on the employment of public relations companies are contained in the central Government conventions on publicity and advertising which have been recognised by successive Governments.

Detailed guidance on tendering procedures is regularly issued to agencies and passed to other public bodies on request.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the official cell capacity and (b) the inmate prison population in each prison in Scotland on 24 March. [17235]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of this question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stewart to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 3 April 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked the Chief Executive of the Scottish Prison Service, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to reply to your Question relating to (a) the official cell capacity and (b) the inmate prison population in each prison Scotland on 24 March. I am replying in his absence.

The table shows the design capacity and number of prisoners in each penal establishment in Scotland on 24 March 1995.

Establishment	Design capacity	Number of prisoners
Aberdeen	142	171
Barlinnie	939	1,185
Castle Huntly	144	70
Cornton Vale	213	167
Dumfries	139	129
Dungavel	135	116
Edinburgh	508	645
Friarton	56	80
Glenochil	669	484
Greenock	172	252
Inverness	79	108
Longriggend	177	191
Low Moss	396	381
Noranside	135	124
Penninghame	85	50
Perth	426	465
Peterhead	271	205
Polmont	414	394
Shotts	535	450
Scotland	5,635	5,667

In Scotland design capacity is based on single occupancy. The measure of certified normal accommodation used in England and Wales, however, allows, in some instances double occupancy in cells.

Lomond Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the individual members of the Lomond Healthcare NHS trust; and what criteria applied in respect of each appointment. [17415]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 March 1995, Official Report, column 582.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 28 March, how many days per week Mr. Stephen J. Newall is expected to work as chairman of Lomond Healthcare NHS trust. [17644]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Trust chairmen are expected to commit two to three days per week to trust work.

Temporary Teachers

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of (a) teachers and (b) auxiliary school staff in Scotland who are employed on a temporary basis, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17763]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on the number and percentage of teachers employed on a temporary basis in Scottish education authority schools for the years which data are available in the most recent five-year period is as follows:

Year at September	Number (full time equivalents)	Percentage of all teachers
1992	1,942	3.9

These figures include teachers employed in nursery, primary, secondary and special schools. Figures for years subsequent to 1992 are not yet available.

Information is not held centrally in respect of auxiliary school staff employed on a temporary basis.

Higher Education Institutions

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those higher education institutions which are discussing private finance for upgrading or developing facilities with private sector firms; and which firms are involved in these discussions. [17474]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Higher education institutions are free to enter into discussions on private finance with the private sector as they consider appropriate. The names of the institutions or the private sector firms involved are matters of commercial confidence to the institutions concerned.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to refuse to approve any capital projects in higher or further education unless private finance options have been explored. [17473]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We would expect institutions to consider the private finance option. However, projects may proceed to procurement without a private finance option being considered if it is clear that transfer of control and risk is not feasible. It is for the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council to approve capital projects in higher education using criteria based on guidance issued by the Secretary of State.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a list of those invited to attend the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council conference on the private finance initiative; and what specific developments, if any, arise from this conference. [17472]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Higher Education Funding Council was responsible for organising the conference on the private finance initiative. Attendance was not by invitation but by application. I have asked the funding council to write to the hon. Member and provide details of those who attended.

It is now for higher education institutions and the business community to decide on the feasibility of specific developments.

Highland Railway Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the social and economic assessments which he has made over the impact of proposed rail service changes to the highlands. [17751]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the railways rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. No such assessments have been undertaken by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of all representations, which he has received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise since autumn 1994, in respect of rail connections to the highlands. [17752]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise wrote to me on 22 March about sleeper services to Fort William and Motorail services. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many racial incidents have been recorded in Scotland in each year since 1991. [17858]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of racial incidents recorded by the police in Scotland in each year since 1991 are as follows:

1992: 663
1993: 756
1994: 791

Prisoners (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the (a) male and (b) female prison population in Scotland are from ethnic minority groups. [17859]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of this question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stewart to Mr. Jimmy Wray, dated 3 April 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked the Chief Executive of the Scottish Prison Service, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to reply to your Question about the percentage of the male and female prison population in Scotland from ethnic minority groups. I am replying in his absence.

Information on the ethnic origin of persons received into Scottish penal establishments has not been collected. The new Scottish Prison Service Prisoner Records Database which is currently being implemented across the Service, however, will enable us to provide such information after the Summer.

NHS Staff

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of NHS staff in Scotland who are employed on a temporary basis, breaking the data down into (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) medical and dental staff, (c) ambulance staff, (d) ancillary staff and (e) managers and administrative staff, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17758]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on the number of NHS staff in Scotland employed on a temporary basis are not maintained centrally.

Water Authorities and Customers Council

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications he has received for membership of (a) the three new water authorities and (b) the consumer bodies; when he expects to announce the full membership of each of them; and if he will make a statement. [17301]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 30 March 1995]: We have received 759 applications for membership of the new water authorities; 384 for membership of the Customers Council; and 103 for chairmanship of the Customers Council.

Membership will be announced in the late spring or early summer.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the total number of patients in Scotland registered with a dentist; and what was the number of patients that ceased to be registered with a dentist for each financial year since 1985–86; [15539]

(2) if he will list for each health board area in Scotland the number of patients registered with a dentist and the number of patients who ceased to be registered with a dentist for each financial year since 1985–86. [15540]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: Registration of patients with a dentist was introduced in October 1990. Patients may cease to be registered with a dentist for a number of reasons, including lapse of registration owing to non-attendance, transfer to another dentist, agreement between patient and dentist to enter private arrangements, or decision by a dentist no longer to provide NHS treatment to a patient. Patients whose registration lapses may subsequently register with the same or another dentist and cannot be separately identified. The information available is shown in the tables.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates is the value of extra alternative benefits claimed by recipients of fraud savings and of the extra benefit entitlement in cases where there were no fraud savings. [16164]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if statistics kept by his Department on fraud savings include savings arising from non-fraudulent irregularities; what is his estimate of such non-fraudulent savings; and if he will make a statement. [16163]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Statistics kept by the Department on fraud savings do not include savings arising from non-fraudulent irregularities.

Retirement Pensions Forecasting Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account he has taken in conducting a market test of his Department's retirement pensions forecasting unit of the proposed pensions legislation currently before Parliament. [16983]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The effect of the changes proposed by the Pensions Bill on the work of the Benefits Agency's retirement pensions forecasting unit will be taken fully into account when deciding on the feasibility of a market test.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instigate an urgent inquiry to advise on the security implications of ensuring that private firms do not have direct or indirect access to the confidential national insurance information handled by the retirement pensions forecasting unit, in connection with the market testing exercise. [16984]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The study into the feasibility of market testing the work of the retirement pensions forecasting unit will take the security of confidential information fully into account.

Market Testing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the number of staff years allocated since 1992 to his Departmental market testing programme. [16978]

Mr. Roger Evans: This Department has allocated some 306 staff years in support of the market testing programme since 1992.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what delays there have been to the commencement of contracts let to the private sector, following the market testing of accommodation and office services; and if he will make a statement. [16959]

Mr. Roger Evans: This Department has awarded 23 accommodation and office services contracts to external contractors as part of the "Competing for Quality" initiative. Of the five that were subject to minor delays, three were at the request of the Department.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which firms have requested and received permission to delay the commencement of the provision of contracted-out services to his Department; and what were (a) the reasons for each delay and (b) the financial penalties imposed on each firm. [16960]

Mr. Roger Evans: Two companies have requested and received permission to delay the provision of some accommodation and office services to the Benefits Agency. Procord and BET both experienced unexpected staffing difficulties and payments have been adjusted accordingly.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra costs his Department incurred over the past 12 months as a result of private sector companies that were unable to provide contracted-out services at the scheduled contract start date. [16961]

Mr. Roger Evans: None. The prices for five contracts have been adjusted to take account of minor delays.

Pensions (Overseas Residents)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of uprating the retirement pensions payable to present or former United Kingdom citizens living in those countries where uprating has not hitherto been payable (a) to restore them to the level at which the pension would have been payable if they had remained resident in the United Kingdom (i) with and (ii) without full backdated payments and (b) as if the only uprating payable to them since leaving the United Kingdom were that coming into payment in the current year; and if he will estimate separate totals in each case for British pensioners resident in (1) Australia, (2) Canada and (3) New Zealand. [17344]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Such information as is available is in the table:

£ millions

Country	(a) Estimated cost of paying fully indexed pensions	(b) Estimated cost of paying April 1994 uprating only
Australia	110	7
Canada	60	4
New Zealand	20	2
Rest of the world	45	3
Total	235	16

Notes:

1. The estimated costs relate to all state retirement and widow pensioners living abroad whose benefits are not uprated. Separate figures are not available on the cost of uprating benefits only for retirement pensioners or those who are, or were, citizens of the United Kingdom.

2. An estimate of the cost of backdating payments to make good upratings forgone in the past is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) men and (b) women opted to remain on invalidity benefit on reaching retirement age in the latest year for which figures are available; [17347]

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women over the age of retirement are in receipt of invalidity benefit at the latest date for which figures are available. [17346]

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the tables.

Table 1: The number of recipients who reached pension age in the year ending 3 April 1993 who opted to remain on invalidity benefit and were receiving invalidity benefit on 3 April 1993

Gender	Number
Women	14,000

Notes:

1. Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claims rounded to the nearest thousand

2. The figures exclude people who reached pension age in the year ending 3 April 1993 but whose claim to invalidity benefit terminated before the end of that year.

Table 2: The number of people over retirement age receiving Invalidity Benefit on 3 April 1993

Gender	Number
Women	53,000

Note:

Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claims rounded to the nearest thousand.

Child Support

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he intends to meet the chief executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss the release of personal details about Marc Calder of Plymouth; [17094]

(2) if he will make a statement concerning the release of the personal details of Mr. Marc Calder from Plymouth to a local newspaper by the Child Support Agency in Plymouth; and what action he proposes to take. [17096]

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been kept fully appraised of the incident but has no plans to meet the chief executive of the Child Support Agency on the matter.

I understand that the agency immediately instigated an investigation into the incident and as a result a member of staff at the Plymouth Child Support Agency centre was suspended from duty the same day pending further inquiries. Staff disciplinary action is a confidential matter between management, personnel and the member of staff involved. At this stage of the investigation, I cannot provide the hon. Member with any further details of this case which would not breach that confidentiality.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17458]

Mr. Hague: The full information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The available information is as follows.

The public inquiry office is available to members of the public at national call rate. The number of calls taken from January to December 1994 was 86,355. This service is monitored routinely to establish how many incoming calls are presented to the system; the number answered and the average waiting time for answers. This line is not intended to provide a full public enquiry service for the Department, only for members of the public who need to contact the administrative headquarters in London. Other public information lines are available in the Department's agencies, as follows:

	January—December 1994 Calls handled
Benefits agency
Freeline	2,688,000
Benefit inquiry line	930,000
Family credit advice line	2,173,000
Disability living allowance line	2,206,000
Pensions advice line, introduced June 1994	60,392

An assessment of effectiveness is included as part of a national customer service survey undertaken on behalf of the Benefits Agency by Public Attitudes Survey Ltd. It is intended that this will continue annually.

Contributions agency
Social security advice line for employers	240,000

Independent research has predicted the demand for this service will increase by 30 per cent. during the next two years.

TRANSPORT

Sleeper and Motorail Services

16. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had on the future of sleeper and Motorail services from Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [15705]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend and I have had a number of discussions about Anglo-Scottish sleeper and Motorail services with, among others, the franchising director, the chairman of British Railways Board, and the Central Rail Users Consultative Committee.

Ship Crew Safety

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to modify the legislation and regulations governing the occupational safety of the crews of both United Kingdom registered merchant vessels and fishing vessels. [15706]

Mr. Norris: Domestic legislation governing the occupational safety of crews in United Kingdom merchant ships and fishing vessels is under continuous review through the Marine Safety Agency. In addition, further modification to United Kingdom legislation is being undertaken through the implementation of EU directives in consultation with the shipping and fishing industries.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

18. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will authorise the fast rail link between (a) the channel tunnel and London, (b) the channel tunnel and Scotland, (c) the channel tunnel and the north of England and (d) the channel tunnel and Wales. [15707]

Mr. Watts: The construction of the channel tunnel rail link between the channel tunnel and the London terminus at St. Pancras will be authorised by the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill when it becomes law.

The rail link will provide access for direct international trains to Wales, Scotland and the north of England and also convenient connections to domestic services to those countries and regions.

Rail Franchises

19. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising to discuss the award of franchises; and if he will make a statement. [15709]

Dr. Mawhinney: I last met the franchising director to discuss franchising on Wednesday 22 March. I welcome his recent announcement that 37 organisations have applied to pre-qualify for the first group of eight franchises. This is a vote of confidence in railway privatisation.

Public Transport, London

21. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans next to meet the chairman of London Transport to discuss improvements to public transport in London. [15711]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of London Transport regularly to discuss a variety of issues including improvements to LT's services.

M1

22. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to complete the lighting of the M1. [15712]

Mr. Watts: Current plans are to light a total of 155 miles of the M1.

Railway Station Platforms (Accessibility)

23. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway stations in Britain have platforms which need raising to allow access to trains for wheelchair users or others with mobility difficulties. [15713]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available. Facilities for disabled passengers vary from station to station. Government proposals to improve accessibility at stations for disabled passengers are included in the Disability Discrimination Bill, published in January.

Rail Services

25. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of rail services in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales. [15715]

Dr. Mawhinney: Railway privatisation can be expected to bring benefits to Wales as well as other parts of the United Kingdom by delivering better services more closely attuned to customers' needs.

Seat Belts

26. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the cost to local education authorities of introducing seat belts and other safety requirements pertaining to the transportation of children, as stipulated in the draft regulations announced on 15 March. [15716]

Mr. Norris: Costs to individual local authorities have been taken into account in the local government settlement for 1995–96.

Motorway Facilities

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to improve the standards and frequency of rest and recreation facilities on motorways; and if he will make a statement. [15694]

Mr. Watts: In 1992 we deregulated the provision of new motorway service areas with the aim of providing more services more quickly.

British Rail

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many parts of British Rail have been sold since November 1993. [15714]

Mr. Watts: Since November 1993, sales of the following British Rail businesses have been completed:

Meldon Quarry
Special Trains Unit.

In addition, since November 1993 British Rail has offered for sale some 20 other businesses, the sales of which are now under way.

Traffic, London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the flow of traffic in London; and if he will make a statement. [15965]

Mr. Norris: Traffic conditions in London are a frequent theme of discussions and correspondence with a wide range of interested organisations and individuals on topics such as bus priorities, parking management, facilities for cyclists, pedestrian safety, road improvements and investment in public transport. We are currently funding initiatives, including red routes, the London bus priority network, the London cycle network and other improvements on trunk and local roads, to ease the flow of traffic, reduce pollution and improve safety.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17450]

Mr. Norris: My Department set up a public inquiry unit in 1990. It has six staff and annual running costs of £105,000. It has received 487,000 calls since it was set up. Robin Verney and Associates have completed a review of the service and improvements will be made when we move to Great Minster house later this year. My Department does not monitor central inquiry services provided by its executive agencies.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of all representations which he has received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise since autumn 1994 in respect of rail connections to the highlands. [17750]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 27 March 1995, Official Report, column 511. I have no record of receiving any other representations on rail connections to the highlands from Highlands and Islands Enterprise since autumn 1994.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the comparative cost-benefit analysis of the Portskewett-Severn beach and the Cardiff-Weston alignment for the second Severn crossing. [17995]

Mr. Watts: The alignment of the second Severn crossing was fully debated during the passage of the Severn Bridges Bill.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 454, if he will place in the Library the text of the Court of Appeal judgment in the case of the Secretary of State for Transport v. Colonel Owen and Barbara Owen. [18077]

Mr. Watts: Yes.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 153, what was the (a) total expenditure and (b) percentage of gross domestic product for (i) buses without coaches, (ii) trains and (iii) all public transport, inclusive of grants, subsidies and receipts for 1993 and 1994. [17856]

Mr. Norris: Total expenditure on various transport modes, including grants and subsidies, in financial year 1993–94, is as follows:

Mode of transport	Total expenditure £ billion	Per cent. of GDP
Buses and coaches[1]	3.7	0.7
Railways[2]	4.7	0.8
All public transport[3]	9.9	1.8
All GDP[4]	554.8	100

[1] For licensing purposes bus operators are not distinguished from coach operators.

[2] Excludes Tyne and Wear Metro.

[3] Buses, coaches, railways and taxis. The estimate for taxis excludes business use.

[4] Gross domestic product for public transport contains expenditure on personal travel rather than business travel.

A41

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the date on which he received the inspector's report on the proposed A41 Aston Clinton by-pass, following the public inquiry held in November 1994; and when he expects to publish that report and his decision. [18073]

Mr. Watts: The inspector's report was received on 6 January and is being considered by the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport. They will announce their decision and publish the report as soon as possible.

Driving Standards Agency

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who was consulted before the decision to transfer the Driving Standards Agency (Scotland) to Newcastle was taken; what was the level of dissent from the final position; what further measures were undertaken to ensure this decision was accountable; and if the transfer decision is open to further negotiation. [16941]

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the Driving Standards Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from L. M. Manley to Sir David Steel, dated 3 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your questions about the transfer of the Driving Standards Agency (Scotland) to Newcastle.

As I explained in my letter to you of 17 February, in reply to correspondence you had received from the Chief Executive of the Ettrick and Lauderdale District Council, the office in Edinburgh currently undertakes the booking of driving tests and the management and deployment of driving examiners at test centres in Scotland. However, following the recent market test of the booking of driving tests, and the success of an in-house team, the booking work for the north of England and for Scotland will be based in a single office at Newcastle. In reaching this conclusion the in house team has to address whether this solution was cost effective and whether service delivery could be maintained.

The conclusions reached by the bidders about how they might organise the work are their own and it is implicit that the evaluation of their tendered price is dependant upon acceptance of their proposals. My letter of 17 February also explained that there is no requirement under Market Testing guidance to undertake a consultation exercise during the evaluation of the bids.

In determining where to site the work of management and deployment of driving examiners, the Agency took account of the space and staff remaining available at each of its offices to establish the most cost effective location for the work. Siting the work at the DSA office in Newcastle, where both staff and space was available meant the Agency could relinquish its expensive accommodation in Edinburgh and achieve a saving in property rentals.

I should add that whilst the location of the booking office will change the Agency will retain it's driving test centres across Scotland.

Since the result of the Market Test was announced some 27 items of correspondence have been received opposing the decision. These have, in the main, been from MPs on behalf of constituents who are concerned that the level of service will deteriorate with the move. In these cases I have replied advising that the Agency does not expect the closure to have an adverse effect on the published service standards.

The potential impact on service standards was one of the factors considered by the Agency during the evaluation process. The in house team will be subject to a Service Level Agreement which will specify the service targets they must meet and procedures will be in place to monitor their performance against these standards.

The Agency, together with the In House team are planning the timetable and the tasks required to implement the result of the market test. Until such time as the implementation is put in train DSA will continue to consider views.

Signalling Equipment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the signalling equipment in the rail network is now (a) up to 10 years old, (b) 10 to 20 years old, (c) 20 to 30 years old, (d) 30 to 40 years old, (e) 40 to 50 years old and (f) over 50 years old. [17360]

Mr. Watts: Information is not kept by Railtrack in this form and it would involve a disproportionate cost to provide this information.

A6 Bypass

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date it is expected that work will commence on the A6 bypass of Rushden and Higham Ferrers. [17185]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Peter Fry, dated 3 April 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, on what date it is expected that work will commence on the A6 Bypass of Rushden and Higham Ferrers.

Subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures the start of construction will be dependent upon the availability of funding.

Registry of Seamen and Shipping

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on what grounds staff working within the Registry of Seamen and Shipping were asked to volunteer to do maintenance and cleaning work in addition to their normal duties as civil servants; [16968]

(2) on what grounds managers within the Registry of Seamen and Shipping were allowed to issue an official communication to staff requesting them to bring into work building materials with which to repair their new accommodation; [16967]

(3) for what reasons he allowed the Registry of Seamen and Shipping, following a market test, to move into a building which had no window frames and was in a very poor state of repair. [16966]

Mr. Norris: The request was in fact a notice issued by local management in a misguided attempt to economise on funding provided for alternative accommodation and to promote team spirit through self help. The notice was subsequently withdrawn. The new accommodation for the registry was initially lit by artificial lighting which fully met health and safety standards. However, additional windows were put into the buildings some three months after staff moved in.

Airmiss

Mr. Redmond: To as the Secretary of State for Transport if he will send the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the Civil Aviation Authority's report into the airmiss on 22 March involving four Royal Air Force Tornados and an Air UK Fokker 50, 20 miles east of Ottringham, Humberside when it is published; and if he will make a statement. [17132]

Mr. Norris: An airmiss has been reported which involved four American F-15s and an Air UK Fokker 50, 20 miles north-east of Ottringham on 21 March. The joint airmiss working group will review this incident at its June meeting. I have asked the Civil Aviation Authority to send a copy of the working group's report on this incident to the hon. Member for Don Valley as soon as it is available.

DEFENCE

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17618]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies 1994" issued by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, pages 7 and 8 of which detail MOD non-departmental public bodies and "Next Steps Agencies in Government-Review 1994" (Cmd 2750), which details MOD's agencies.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Procurement and Industrial Policy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the joint inquiry into aspects of United Kingdom defence procurement and industrial policy will be completed; and if this inquiry will look specifically at areas which have been affected by a decline in defence spending; what was the cost of previous inquiries into this area in the last five years; and what is the projected cost of the current inquiry. [17376]

Mr. Freeman: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the recent joint inquiry set up by the House of Commons Defence Select Committee and the Trade and Industry Select Committee into aspects of defence procurement and industrial policy. The timing, scope and costs of such inquiries are matters for the Committees.

Research and Development

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of investment in defence research and development in each of the last five years; and what proposals he has to increase defence research and development expenditure. [17378]

Mr. Freeman: The trend in expenditure on defence research and development is set out in the annual publications "Defence Statistics" and "Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology". As the 1993 White Paper "Realising Our Potential" noted, direct expenditure on defence research and development is planned to fall somewhat over the remainder of the decade, though this will be offset to a considerable extent by efficiencies arising out of "Front Line First", including through the formation of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency on 1 April.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total amount spent by his Department on research and development in each of the last 10 years at today's prices. [17542]

Mr. Freeman: The figures, based on table 1.4 of "Defence Statistics 1994" are as follows:

Year	Total amount (£ million)
1983–84	3,293.5
1984–85	3,452.3
1985–86	3,521.6
1986–87	3,297.8
1987–88	3,088.1
1988–89	2,850.1
1989–90	2,888.7
1990–91	2,715.0
1991–92	2,795.0
1992–93[1]	2,142.4
1993–94[2]	2,317.4

All figures £ million, VAT inclusive and are at 1994–95 prices.

[1] Figures from 1992–93 onward subject to revision to accord with Frascati definitions. Futher details in Table 1.4 of "Defence Statistics 1994".

Dr David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards defence research and development collaboration with European partners; and if the percentage of this collaboration will increase over the next 10 years. [17544]

Mr. Freeman: My Department participates in a large number of international research collaboration programmes both bilateral and multilateral. The primary objective of IRC is to obtain value for money by sharing the costs of necessary research programmes and facilities with allied nations. The overall strategy is to maintain a balance between our involvement with Europe and the US. While every endeavour will be made to increase the amount of defence research undertaken on a collaborative basis, there is no policy intention to change this balance. We have had considerable experience of collaborative development and in the future expect that the opportunities for collaboration of reducing cost will be further exploited.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of defence research and development was spent on collaboration with (a) the United States of America and (b) European Union members in each of the last 10 years. [17543]

Mr. Freeman: The primary objective of international research collaboration is to obtain value for money by sharing the costs of necessary research programmes and facilities with allied nations. The information requested concerning the proportion of defence research that was carried out collaboratively over the last 10 years, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, for financial year 1991–92 and 1992–93 the figures for collaborative research joint programmes are 5.5 per cent. and 6 per cent. respectively, and I anticipate this ratio continuing to rise in the future.

No equivalent figures are held relating to development expenditure.

Military Assistance

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department on military assistance for non-NATO countries in each of the last five years. [17341]

Mr. Soames: The primary responsibility for funding military assistance lies with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. On occasion, however, and where the aims serve defence interests, the MOD agrees to waive the costs of training provided to foreign Governments.

The total of these waivers for non-NATO countries in the last five years for which records are available is as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	4,900,000
1992–93	5,600,000
1991–92	4,000,000
1990–91	4,200,000
1989–90	5,800,000

In addition, some £70,000 was spent in 1993–94 in support of the United Kingdom's programme of bilateral defence contact with central and eastern Europe.

Details of the assistance provided are confidential between Governments.

Attack Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the RAF's front-line attack aircraft possess a precision capability; and how many will have this capability by 2000. [17538]

Mr. Freeman: All front-line attack aircraft—Tornado GR1, Harrier, Jaguar—are capable of delivering precision weapons. We have in hand a series of programmes which will substantially improve our precision capabilities by the turn of the century. We plan to extend the provision of TIALD—thermal imaging airborne laser designator—pods and a contract has been placed for the supply of a new low level laser-guided bomb. We have issued an invitation to tender for conventially-armed stand-off-missile. This weapon is planned to come into service by the end of the century.

Armoured Vehicle Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to consider joining the Franco-German armoured vehicle programme; and if he will make a statement. [17540]

Mr. Freeman: We have made clear our interest in participating in a collaborative programme for armoured utility vehicles as one of the projects in a new European armaments structure. We are pursuing this with France and Germany.

Property Management

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's policy for the continuation of construction and property management work on sites proposed for closure under the defence costs study. [17989]

Mr. Soames: My Department's policy is that property management work, which may involve construction, on sites proposed for closure will continue as appropriate depending on the needs of the occupants up to the date of closure. Any subsequent maintenance work to make buildings wind and weather proof as appropriate and to satisfy health and safety obligations will be carried out up to the date of disposal.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the financial cost of (a) construction and property management work done and (b) any other expenditure on each site since 1994 owned by his Department and proposed for closure under the defence costs study; [17990]

(2) what is the financial value of contracts for construction work on bases proposed for closure under the defence costs study which have been awarded in each of the months since July 1993. [17991]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Procurement

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time taken by his Department to assess procurement tenders and decide on contract awards in each of the last five years. [17551]

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what undertakings he is seeking from United States manufacturers for offset work in the United Kingdom, in relation to orders placed with United States manufacturers of defence equipment. [18074]

Mr. Freeman: It is our policy to seek offset work in the United Kingdom whenever we make a major procurement—over £10 million—from the United States. Letters of agreement, underpinning the offset commitment, are concluded between ourselves and the contractor and form the basis for monitoring progress in meeting the offset obligations.

Arms Sales

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the receiving of commission payments by (a) civil servants, (b) members of the government, (c) hon. Members and (d) relatives of hon. Members involved in the sale of arms to overseas governments; and if he will make a statement. [17548]

Mr. Freeman: MOD civil servants are bound by departmental instructions which forbid them to make use of their official position to further their private interests or lay themselves open to suspicion of dishonesty. Furthermore the acceptance of a gift or other consideration by a Crown servant as an inducement or reward can be a criminal offence.

Members of the Government are bound by "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" which states that no Minister or member of a Minister's family should accept gifts which might place him or her under an obligation.

I cannot answer for other Members of the House or their relatives.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17455]

Mr. Soames: My Department's public inquiry office was established many years ago. Calls are routed to it either via the main switchboard or as a result of inclusion of the contact numbers in various commercial publications. Since 1988, the earliest date for which records are available, an annual average of 41,000 calls have been handled. Although the cost breakdown requested would not be available without disproportionate cost, the staff costs involved are less than £50,000 a year. No recent assessment of the effectiveness of this office has been undertaken.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment at present at RAF Finningley is required by the RAF; and what equipment is surplus to the RAF's future needs. [17863]

Mr. Soames: Following the announcement of the closure of RAF Finningley, the RAF's requirement for the equipment based at the station will be reviewed. At present, no equipment has been declared surplus to the RAF's requirements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the uses to which RAF Finningley can be put by (a) the Ministry of Defence and (b) other Government Departments. [17862]

Mr. Soames: The decision to close RAF Finningley has only recently been taken, and no detailed assessment of alternative uses has yet been made. If no alternative defence use is identified, however, the site will be disposed of in accordance with our normal procedures. These would include detailed discussions with the local planning authority and an assessment of alternative uses. Other Government Departments will have an opportunity to express any interest they may have.

Government Contracts

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the report by the review board for Government contracts on its 1995 annual review of the profit formula for non-competitive Government contracts. [17547]

Mr. Freeman: The Government have accepted the overall target rate of return on capital employed as recommended by the review board in its report. The new rate will be 18.5 per cent. compared with the current rate of 18.2 per cent., both on the basis of historic costs. It will be effective from 1 April this year. There are other points arising from this report and from the board's report on the seventh general review in 1993 which officials will be discussing with the CBI as part of our continuing drive to secure maximum value for money from our defence contracts. The report has been printed and copies have been placed in the Library.

Mine Clearance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the British companies, which manufacture or have manufactured mines, which have received finance from Her Majesty's Government or the United Nations to clear minefields, together with the number of occasions on which each company has received such funding. [16822]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

No British mine-manufacturing companies have received finance for mine clearance from us. The UN on one occasion financed Royal Ordnance, a company which has in the past manufactured mines, to undertake a mine clearance project. I understand that Royal Ordnance has not manufactured mines for the past 10 years.

WALES

Drug Misuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what initiatives he will take to assist professionals engaged in combating drug abuse in Wales; [16835]

(2) what progress is being made concerning drug abuse in Wales. [16833]

Mr. Richards: We are preparing a Welsh drug and alcohol strategy which I hope to issue for consultation in April.

Class Sizes

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average class size (a) in primary schools and (b) in secondary schools in Dyfed in each year from 1979 to the present. [16864]

Mr. Richards: Data for 1979 in respect of primary schools are not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost. For secondary schools, comparable information is not available before September 1987.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 766, if he will give a breakdown according to age of the children in Dyfed who received statements of special educational needs for the first time, for each year since 1987. [16863]

Mr. Richards: The number of children by age, for whom statements of special educational needs were made for the first time, for each calendar year since 1991, are shown in the following table. Data were not collected by age before 1991.

	Under 5	5–16	Over 16	Total
1991	21	251	0	272
1992	21	374	2	397
1993	32	403	2	437

Dental Problems

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh school children had serious dental problems in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement. [16778]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally. However, two publications concerning, in part, child dental health in Wales have recently been issued by Office of Population Censuses and Surveys:

(i) The National Diet and Nutrition Survey: Children aged one-and -half to four-and-half years. ISBN 0-11-691612-5

(ii) Children's Dental Health in the United Kingdom 1993. ISBN 0-11-691607-9

In addition, directors of dental public health produce annual reports which include epidemiological data relating to the dental health of children in their districts. These are available from district health authorities.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the mileage of dual carriageway at present; and what it was in 1985. [17403]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures for the length of dual carriageway for years prior to 1987 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Excluding motorways, the length of dual carriageway in Wales was 153 miles at 1 April 1987 and/or 183 miles at 1 April 1994.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the National Museum of Wales. [17396]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Museum of Wales employed 507 people at 31 March 1995.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning north and south Wales rail links with the channel tunnel. [17404]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced the channel tunnel services between the continent and locations beyond London on 14 October. European Passenger Services Ltd. may refine these services to suit demand.

Suicides (Farming Community)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths there were through suicide among the farming community for each year since 1988 up to the most recent figure available; and if he will make a statement. [17483]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table.

Suicides in the farming community of Wales

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Deaths registered as suicide[1]:
Farmers[2]	9	7	10	8	4	9
Farm workers	2	—	1	2	—	2
Total	11	7	11	10	4	11

[1] The figures relate to deaths registered in the years shown. Deaths are recorded according to the date of registration and not the date of occurrence.

[2] Farmers, horticulturists and farm managers.

Motorways

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the current mileage of motorway in Wales and (b) what was the mileage in 1985. [17402]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The current length of motorway in Wales is 78 miles and was 74 miles at 1 April 1985.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in securing more apprenticeships in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17406]

Mr. Redwood: The departmental report—Cmnd 2815—sets out in paragraphs 4.13 and 4.14 my intentions for expanding modern apprenticeships in Wales.

Negotiations are currently taking place with the training and enterprise councils to agree the numbers and occupational areas in which modern and accelerated modern apprenticeships will be offered.

Temporary NHS Staff

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of NHS staff in Wales who are employed on a temporary basis, breaking the data down into (a) nursing and midwifery staff, (b) medical and dental staff, (c) ambulance staff, (d) ancillary staff and (e) managers and administrative staff, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17765]

Mr. Richards: Complete and reliable information is not available centrally.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the cost of establishing, operating and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17447]

Mr. Redwood: A freephone citizens charter inquiry line has been provided since July 1991. Total costs incurred to date are in the region of £1,500. Over 400 calls have been received providing a valuable service to members of the public needing information on charter-related matters in Wales.

Departmental Report

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake an exercise reconciling in detail appendix 1 from his departmental report, Cm 2815, with table 127 from "Welsh Economic Trends No 15 1994"; if he will place a copy of the exercise in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [17546]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Table 127 of "Welsh Economic Trends No 15 1994", is taken from figure 1.02 of the Welsh Office departmental report 1994—Cm 2515. The difference between these tables and the equivalent data in the 1995 departmental report are mainly due to revisions to the outturn and estimated outturn for the years up to 1994–95 together with the changes to expenditure plans for 1995–96 and onwards following the 1994 public expenditure survey. Appendix 1 of Cm 2815 is itself a disaggregation of the programme totals of figure 1.01 of the same document.

Temporary Teachers

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the past five years, the number of (a) teachers and (b) auxiliary school staff in Wales who are employed on a temporary basis, also expressing the data as a percentage of the total numbers in each respective staff group. [17762]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many responses he has received to date to his consultative exercise on the licensing of houses in multiple occupation; how many of these were broadly in favour of a national comprehensive licensing system; what action he now proposes to take in the light of these representation; and what is his timetable for action. [17469]

Mr. Redwood: I received 47 replies to my letter of 8 December 1994. Eighty per cent. were broadly in favour of licensing, but there was no clear consensus on the way in which a licensing system should operate. The replies raised a wide range of issues for further consideration and I will make an announcement about the outcome in due course.

Health and Social Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales; when he expects to make an appointment to the vacant post of the head of research and development for the NHS in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [18075]

Mr. Redwood: The new office of research and development for health and social services in Wales is to be established in the University of Wales, college of medicine. I hope that the college will be in a position to advertise the post of director shortly.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area of Wales is designated as being environmentally sensitive; how much Government funding is spent annually on environmentally sensitive areas; how this formula is calculated; and if he will make a statement. [17792]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In Wales 519,800 hectares, representing around a quarter of the total land area has been designated under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme. Gross expenditure in the financial year 1993–94 was £1.542 million. Financial provision is planned to rise to £6.941 million in 1996–97. Payments are calculated on the basis of income forgone and in recognition of farmers following prescribed management practices.

The environmentally sensitive areas scheme in Wales positively promotes the co-existence of conservation and efficient farming by offering payments to farmers willing to maintain or introduce environmentally beneficial farming methods.

New GPs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, column 385, what was the level of new entrants to general practice in Wales in each of the past three years. [18001]

Mr. Redwood: Over the past three years there have been approximately 90 new entrants to general practice per year in Wales.

Laundry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the South Glamorgan health authority and the Welsh health common services authority concerning the closure of the Lansdowne road central laundry, Cardiff; [18004]

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh health common services authority and the South Glamorgan health authority concerning laundry charges for communal laundering of terry towel nappies; and what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of the increased use of disposable nappies on sewerage treatment expenditure.

Mr. Redwood: None. This is an operational matter for the authorities concerned.

Green Belt Guidance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish his decision with reference to planning guidance on green belts in Wales. [18029]

Mr. Redwood: I will shortly issue for consultation draft planning policy guidance for Wales; this guidance will cover green belts.

Menai Straits

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce his decision on whether the Menai straits should become a designated marine nature reserve. [18031]

Mr. Redwood: The matter is presently under consideration. I will announce my decision at the earliest opportunity.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NHS trusts in Wales hold their monthly board meetings in public. [18002]

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Derelict Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what target for the reclamation of derelict land in Wales he has set for 1995–96; and what progress has been made on reclaiming 600 hectares of derelict land in 1994–95 in accordance with "This Common Inheritance: The UK Report 1995". [18030]

Mr. Redwood: A target of 850 hectares has been set for 1995–96. Outturn figures are not yet available for 1994–95 but the WDA is forecasting the completion of 550 hectares.

Ely Community Survey

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the joint survey of all residents in Ely, Cardiff by the authority and the South Glamorgan county council; what estimate he has made of the cost of the health authority's share of the survey; and what assessment he has made of the health related purposes of such a survey. [17997]

Mr. Redwood: None.

A48

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on grant-aiding the private access road to the University Hospital of Wales from the A48 Eastern avenue; when he anticipates making a decision; and if he will make a statement. [17998]

Mr. Redwood: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Wales met councillors and officials from Cardiff city council recently. A decision about funding for the road will be made once a satisfactory business case has been submitted by UHW Healthcare NHS trust and once private finance opportunities have been explored.

Examination Achievements

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students gained A-level qualification, or GNV2 equivalent, last year, and what percentage that was of the year group normally sitting for this qualification. [17993]

Mr. Richards: The following table shows the number of students gaining at least one pass at A-level in the 1994 summer examinations and the numbers gaining a vocational qualification at level 2 or above. Individual students may have gained both A-levels and vocational qualifications and so may be counted twice.

Age of student [1] [2]	Number gaining at least one pass at A-level [3]	Number gaining vocational qualification at level 2 or above	Percentage of age group in education [4] gaining A-level pass or vocational equivalent
Col 1	Col 2	Col 3	Col 4
16	255	1,767	8.2
17	9,006	2,097	51.9
18	1,729	2,066	41.3

Notes:

[1] As at 31 August 1993.

[3] Includes all students, irrespective of the type of institution, if any, at which they studied.

[4] Full and part time students in school or Further Education colleges.

Source:

Welsh Examinations Database.

There is no information about the number of students taking examinations by year group. The figures in columns 2 and 3 have been expressed in column 4 as a percentage of the number of students of that age in education at school or further education colleges only, in 1993–94.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the compulsory purchase order for the proposed Bute avenue and any such advertised in the compulsory purchase order not within the designated area of the corporation; and if he will make a statement. [17749]

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 31 March 1995]: I have had no consultation with the chairman of CBDC over this issue.

The corporation is empowered to acquire land by agreement, or with my authorisation, compulsorily, outside its designated area under the terms of section 142 of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 4 April 1995

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomats (Background)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many current ambassadors, deputy ambassadors and high commissioners have graduated from (a) Oxford and (b) Cambridge universities; and how many from universities in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) other universities. [17968]

Mr. Goodlad: The current numbers of ambassadors, deputy ambassadors and high commissioners who have graduated from the listed universities are as follows:

(a) Oxford—63

(b) Cambridge—55

Universities in:

(i) Scotland—12

(ii) Wales—3

(iii) Northern Ireland—1

(iv) Others—84 (of whom 63 attended universities in England).

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many current overseas ambassadors, deputy ambassadors and high commissioners have originated from (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland or (d) Northern Ireland. [17967]

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Turkey

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Turkey. [17785]

Mr. David Davis: Our concerns about human rights form a major part of our dialogue with Turkey, both bilaterally and with our EU partners. The Turkish Government have undertaken to make a number of reforms in this area. We look forward to seeing these put into effect.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the total number of people who applied for visas at each British post in Turkey; and how many (a) were accepted, (b) were rejected and (c) resulted in re-application in each of the last 24 months. [18307]

Mr. Baldry: In 1993 and 1994—the last two years for which full figures are available—the total number of applications made at entry clearance issuing posts in Turkey was:

	1993	1994
Ankara	4,840	3,371
Istanbul	47,390	39,257
Total	52,230	42,628

Of these a total of 47,971 were issued and 2,744 were refused in 1993; and 38,130 were issued and 2,881 were refused in 1994.

Records are not kept of the numbers of applicants who reapply.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held at the United Nations involving Britain concerning the Turkish military action in Iraq. [18308]

Mr. David Davis: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what direct representations have been made to the Government of Turkey concerning the invasion of the Kurdish areas of Iraq; and what response he received. [18418]

Mr. David Davis: We have made a number of representations to the Government of Turkey, both bilaterally and together with our EU partners. The Turkish Government have stated that the operation will be of limited duration and their forces withdrawn immediately Turkish objectives have been met.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific actions still need to be taken before UNAVEM III peacekeeping forces are ready to respond to a call to be deployed in Angola. [17826]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Preparations for the deployment of UNAVEM III infantry units to Angola are proceeding in accordance with the UN Secretary General's report to the Security Council of 27 March.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said to the House on 29 March, Official Report, column 1017, the deployment which is envisaged can be completed and fulfilled only if the parties on the ground fulfil their commitments.

Anglo-American Defence Agreement

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of the further proposed amendment of the 1958 Anglo-American mutual defence agreement. [17477]

Mr. David Davis: There are no further proposed amendments to the 1958 UK/US mutual defence agreement. The hon. Member may be referring to Cm 2785. This is the same amendment which was laid before the House in October last year in the country series of Command Papers. Its appearance in the treaty series simply records that it has entered into force for the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has in regard to (a) a fissile material production freeze, (b) the strengthening of safeguards on plutonium and enriched uranium, (c) the reduction of the number of United Kingdom nuclear warheads deployed and in store, (d) the banning of the stockpiling of surplus plutonium and (e) the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty for presentation on behalf of Her Majesty's Government at the review and extensions conference for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to be held in New York from 17 April.

Mr. David Davis: The UK supported the UN General Assembly resolution in 1993 calling for the negotiation of a convention to ban the production of fissile material for explosive purposes. Since then we have supported efforts in the conference on disarmament in Geneva to set up an ad hoc committee to begin negotiation of such a convention. On 23 March the CD agreed the mandate for the ad hoc committee. We hope negotiations will begin soon.

The UK has full confidence in the effectiveness of the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards system and its ability to detect diversion of nuclear material from the purposes declared for it. Events in Iraq in recent years have already lead to a number of initiatives, which the UK has supported, to strengthen IAEA systems in regard to undeclared nuclear activities.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18325]

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Taiwan

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what equipment the Government consider is covered by his Department's arms export policy to Taiwan.

Mr. Goodlad: We restrict the export to Taiwan on licensable defence-related equipment. Applications for export licences to supply defence-related equipment and technology are considered case by case. In scrutinising applications, we shall in future give greater weight to the implications for regional security tension, rather than focusing narrowly on Taiwan's military capability as hitherto. This is the result of a regular review of our policy. It does not amount to any substantial relaxation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Competing for Quality Initiative

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to review the "Competing for Quality" initiative. [18695]

Mr. David Hunt: The Government confirmed in the Command Paper "Taking Forward Continuity and Change" in January their intention to conduct such a review. From the results reported by Departments I believe that the initiative has already achieved significant efficiency improvements in public services while maintaining or improving quality. In seeking further improvements in value for money, it is important that we learn from the full range of experience gained in the last three years, and from both public and private sector participants in the programme. I have today commissioned the review to ensure that, in developing their future strategies for improving value for money, Departments and agencies can apply these techniques where they are most effective.

The review will be run along the lines of a multi-departmental scrutiny by a team drawn from a range of Government Departments and the private sector; it will commence on 24 April 1995, and will report in the autumn. The review will focus on the main change associated with the initiative: the development of a large programme of market testing and contracting out in central Government. The team will scrutinise the results of the programme, analysing the experience gained in the application and management of the process to identify how far the objectives of the initiative have been achieved and how the techniques of market testing and contracting out should best be developed for the future.

The full terms of reference are as follows:

Terms of Reference:

To evaluate the Government's competing for quality initiative—market testing and contracting out—as a means of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of public services.

In particular, to identify to what extent, through the introduction of competition, Government have been able to:

—Obtain better value for taxpayers' money in the provision of public services;

—Deliver quality of service within Government and to users of public services;

—Provide users of public services with a wider variety of facilities and services;

—Enable managers to concentrate on their core activities;

—Generate innovative ways of providing public services;

—Enable staff to operate at higher levels of performance and with a greater sense of job satisfaction;

—Encourage the identification of new opportunities for private sector involvement in the delivery of public services.

The study will also examine the methods by which the initiative has been managed and implemented within Government and communicated to other interested parties in order to identify those factors which have affected the extent to which the various objectives of the initiative have been achieved.

Publicity

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d), and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spend on recruitment advertising, for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17614]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each years of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17613]

Mr. Horam: Details of expenditure on advertising and other promotional materials and activities by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's Office, and the Office of Public Service and Science and its agencies for each year since 1992–93 are as follows:

	1992–93		1993–94		1994–95
	Cabinet Office	COI	Cabinet Office	COI	Cabinet Office	COI

(c) Newspaper advertising	£653,700	£11,000	£1,039,700	£13,000	£404,600	£16,000
(d) Other advertising and promotional materials and activities	£681,400	—	£8,41,472	—	£960,700	—
(e) Total (a) to (d)	£1,335,200	£11,000	£1,881,100	£13,000	£1,365,300	£16,000
(f) Proportion of (e) spent on recruitment advertising as a percentage of (e)	7.4 per cent.	100 per cent.	5.4 per cent.	100 per cent.	7.2 per cent.	100 per cent.

Notes:

1. Cabinet Office expenditure is mostly on the citizens charter and the Civil Service College's promotional material.
2. Figures for 1994–95 are provisional.
3. Estimates for 1995–96 are not available.

Corresponding figures for Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which assembles its figures by calender year, are:

	1992	1993	1994	1995 (estimated)
(a) Television advertising	—	—	—	—
(b) Radio advertising	—	£11,000	£8,000	—

(f) Proportion of (e) spent on recruitment advertising as a percentage of (e)	7.4 per cent.	9.1 per cent.	5.7 per cent.	3.2 per cent.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the estimated costs for the current year and the next two years of the royal publicity services. [18311]

Mr. Horam: Estimated expenditure by COI in 1994–95 on publicity services for the royal household is £350,000. The estimates for 1995–96 contain provision for £471,000 and the survey for 1996–97 is the same.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to increase the resources allocated to the promotion and advertising of the code of practice on access to Government information over its second year of operations from 4 April. [17903]

Mr. Horam: Expenditure on publicity for the code of practice on access to Government information is kept under constant review to ensure that resources are allocated efficiently and cost-effectively. The Office of Public Service and Science is preparing a second edition of its explanatory leaflet, including an ethnic minority language version. Opportunities for further publicity will be taken as they arise.

Information Super-highway

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17741]

Mr. Horam: There is no single electronic mail address to cover the whole of the Cabinet Office and the Office of Public Service and Science.

My Internet electronic mail address is jhoram@ccta.gov.uk, and that of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is dhunt@ccta.gov.uk.

The Office of the Public Service and Science is leading and co-ordinating the use of information superhighways by Government Departments, stimulating public discussion of super-highway issues; and, at an international level, leading a G7 pilot project on "Government On-Line". The CCTA Government information service on the Internet provides information from all parts of the Department, including the Office of Science and Technology, the citizens charter unit, the machinery of Government division, the Civil Service College and HMSO.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18332]

Mr. Horam: This question concerns operational matters and I have asked the chief executives of agencies in my Departments to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. N. Edwards to Mr. Paul Flynn, Dated 3 April 1995:

No Jobs have been taken over by contractors since April 1993 at Chessington Computer Centre (an Agency of the OPSS).

69 jobs have disappeared through efficiency and productivity initiatives since April 1993.

Letter from S. H. F. Hickey To Mr. Paul Flynn, Dated 31 March 1995:

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to reply for the Civil Service College to your Question about job losses in agencies (Ref PQ18332)

Over the past two years no jobs at the Civil Service College have been newly taken over by contactors. There has been a small increase in the overall numbers of staff employed at the College due to a substantial increase in the amount of training and related consultancy that we have undertaken.

Letter from Mike Devereau to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

You asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he would list the number of jobs that have been lost by his agencies in the last two years that have been (a) taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

As this is an operational matter I have been asked to reply for the Central Office of Information.

In March 1995 there were 493 permanent staff in COI against 583 in April 1993.

No jobs have been lost as a direct result of market testing. The reduction in staff numbers is the result of:

a) improvements in efficiency

b) increase in the employment of contract staff to cope with the volatility of volume and nature of work.

a) cessation or reduction of function

COI does not maintain a staff complement and cannot realistically identify individual jobs lost or gained. Managers are constantly reviewing job functions and reassigning work in the light of current needs. The services provided to government by COI are constantly changing and there is no way of telling whether jobs now are the same as those that existed two years ago.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from Paul Freeman to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your question tabled on 30 March (N 95) regarding jobs lost in Agencies insofar as HMSO is concerned.

HMSO trades in a dynamic environment and jobs are frequently changing as a result of business imperatives. Some jobs disappear as a consequence of greater IT sophistication, changing technology, reorganisation or because contracts are lost; others are formed to meet new requirements, to progress new initiatives, to enhance service or to service new contracts.

In the provision of printing services, in particular, some work is performed in-house and some is contracted out. This balance is constantly changing, and it is not possible to identify particular jobs.

The overall position is that on 31 December 1992, the total staff employed by HMSO (including temporary staff) was 3,174 and by 31 December 1994, this had fallen to 2,906.

Letter from Dr. Elizabeth McCloy to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 31 March 1995:

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to reply to your question about jobs lost in the past two years.

In that period, the Civil Service Occupational Health and Safety Agency has lost three jobs. They were at the Atomic Weapons Establishment where my Agency was unsuccessful in retaining the provision of occupational health services. Only one of the posts was filled on a permanent basis and that incumbent has secured employment with the successful contractor.

Letter from Craig Muir to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question of 30 March asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster:

> "if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors, and (b) disappeared.

I have been asked to write in reply in relation to Recruitment and Assessment Services.

In the last two years, 6 posts have been taken over by contractors due to the market testing exercise of Reprographics won by HMSO.

We have also reduced staffing by 45 posts as a result of rationalisation of the Agency's working methods. A detailed breakdown of staffing numbers is attached.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Salaries

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Lord President of the Council what has been the change in real terms in hon. Members' salaries since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The real terms increase in the parliamentary salary between mid-June 1979 and end December 1994 was 28 per cent.

Senior Salaries Review Body

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he communicated to the Government Actuary's Department Her Majesty's Government's decision in respect of the SSRB's current recommendations; and if he will state the precise terms in which the decisions were conveyed to the Government Actuary's Department and his method of communicating them.

Mr. Newton: My officials wrote to the Government Actuary's Department on 23 March 1995 asking it to complete its report on the basis that the Government would propose acceptance of the recommendation for an increased death-in-service benefit. A copy of the letter was sent to the fund secretary at the same time. I have also sent the right hon. Member a copy.

PRIME MINISTER

Members of Parliament (Contacts)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what central record is kept of requests by groups of hon. Members seeking to discuss issues with Ministers. [18153]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. So far as my right hon. Friend is aware, none.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government policy on official contact between civil servants and spokespersons in Her Majesty's official Opposition. [18138]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. Opposition spokesmen may request briefings on departmental organisation or policies, or in advance of overseas travel. Ministers would expect to be asked to give their authority for such meetings, and to be present if sensitive matters of public policy are to be discussed. Civil servants may also on occasions have dealings with Opposition spokesmen on Ministers' behalf; again, Ministers would expect to authorise such meetings.

The conventions relating to confidential pre-election contacts between senior civil servants and opposition parties are described in a memorandum submitted to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee by the Cabinet Office in November 1994, printed at page 29, vol II of the Committee's Fifth Report, Session 1993–94. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has agreed that such contacts should be permitted from early 1996 in advance of the next general election.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to ensure that all of the documents (a) seized by Ministry of Defence police from the offices of British Manufacture and Research Company in April 1990 and (b) held by the receivers of Astra Holdings and British Manufacture and Research Company are made available to the Scott inquiry. [18243]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. All the documents taken from the offices of the British Manufacture and Research Company were sent to the receivers for Astra on 22 June 1993. The question of the provision of any of these documents to the Scott inquiry is one for the receiver and the inquiry.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to introduce legislation to ratify the chemical weapons convention. [18162]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The legislation needed to enable the United Kingdom to ratify the chemical weapons convention will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and the Government's other legislative priorities permit.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 823, which other countries he had in mind as pursuing the same model of rail privatisation as Her Majesty's Government; and what were the points of similarities he was referring to in each case. [18163]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. A number of other European countries including Germany, Sweden, Denmark and Holland have restructured or are restructuring their railways to split responsibility for track and infrastructure from the operation of services. Both Germany and Holland plan to privatise some or all of their railways on this basis.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to an hon. or right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question. [18434]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The information as requested is not available.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18435]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18436]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. None.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18431]

(2) To ask the Prime Minister how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18432]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be provided in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report. [18433]

The Lord President: I have been asked to reply. The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Publicity

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94 separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotions materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17631]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. For this purpose, the Prime Minister's Department is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science.

EDUCATION

Asbestos Survey

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what access headteachers in London have to the results of the 1983 Inner London education authority survey of asbestos in London schools. [17865]

Mr. Robin Squire: The responsibilities of the former Inner London education authority for health and safety in schools are now exercised by individual inner London boroughs. It is not known whether ILEA made available the results of any asbestos survey to those authorities. The Department does not hold a copy of such a survey.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in her Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18322]

Mr. Boswell: The Department has only one next steps agency, the Teachers Pensions Agency, which was established on 1 April 1992. Changes in staffing numbers in the agency over the last two years have been as a result of internal efficiency improvements.

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers' employers are provided with services by the Teachers Pensions Agency. [16969]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Teachers Pensions Agency currently provides services to 3,368 teachers' employers.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what facilities are provided and arrangements made for the comfort and well-being of staff who (a) smoke and (b) do not wish to be affected by smoking at (i) the work station and (ii) rest, recreation and refreshment facilities at Sanctuary Buildings, Great Smith street, London. [18281]

Mr. Forth: From 1 April 1995 smoking in sanctuary buildings is permitted only in three workrooms designated for this purpose.

Pupil Ratios

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current ratio of (a) pupils to teachers and (b) pupils to other education staff in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) other major competitor countries. [18067]

Mr. Robin Squire: The readily available information on pupil-teacher ratios is shown in the table. Information on non-teaching staff is not held centrally.

Administration Costs

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average cost per local education authority school in Essex for administration in the last year for which statistics are available. [17840]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the financial year 1995–96, the Essex local education authority's planned expenditure on management and administration amounts to £9,925 per school. This figure relates to all county, voluntary and special schools maintained by the authority and is derived from the budget statement published by the authority under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Funding Agency for Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total budget for the Funding Agency for Schools in each of the years it has been in operation. [17986]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Funding Agency for Schools was established on 1 April 1994. Total grant paid to the agency in the financial year 1994–95 for its running costs—revenue and capital expenditure—was £10.927 million.

Union Jack

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate she has made of the number and percentage of schools that fly the Union Jack on a daily basis since her predecessor called for more flag flying. [17855]

Mr. Forth: None.

Teachers

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers were employed in Essex maintained schools in each of the last five years. [17838]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the full-time equivalent number of teachers employed in maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in Essex for January 1990 to January 1994.

Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what representations she has had from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the levels of university pay; [17789]

(2) what representations she has had from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on difficulties of recruitment to particular departments and specialisms; [17790]

(3) what discussion she has had with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the number of university staff on short-term contracts. [17788]

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend meets the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals regularly and receives representations from them on a number of subjects. The issue of difficulties in recruitment to particular departments and specialisms was raised when she met the CVCP in September. The issue of university pay was raised when she spoke to the CVCP conference in December 1994. She has had no discussions with the CVCP about short-term contracts.

A-level Courses

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to reduce the number of students dropping out of GCE A-level courses before taking their examinations. [17791]

Mr. Boswell: The Government attach great importance to this matter across 16 to 19-year-old education. If drop-out rates are to be reduced it is essential that young people choose the school or college, and the type of course which best suits their needs. Recent Government initiatives should increasingly help students and schools and colleges to achieve this. We have taken steps to: establish a range of high-quality vocational options to stand alongside the more established GCE A-levels and increase the choice of qualifications available to 16 to 19-year-olds; publish more and better information about the performance of schools and colleges at this phase of education; increase and improve careers education and guidance in schools and colleges; and provide colleges with a direct financial incentive to improve initial guidance and retention.

Essex Local Education Authority

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time equivalent employees were employed by the Essex local education authority other than those engaged within schools, in each of the last four years. [17837]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on staff employed by local authorities is collected by the local government management board on behalf of the joint staffing watch group. The table shows the total number of staff employed within the education service of Essex local authority for the years 1991 to 1994. The survey does not distinguish between staff employed in schools and those employed elsewhere. As full-time equivalents of the part-time staff are not available, separate head-counts for both full-time and part-time staff are provided.

Notes:

1. The table covers all manual and non-manual staff in the LEA maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector, the special and further education sectors and central services. Staff employed by self-governing (GM) schools are not included. The 1994 figures exclude colleges which transferred to the new FE sector in April 1993.

2. "Education—other" includes education support, clerical, school meals and premises related staff employed in schools and colleges, together with central services and administration within the education service.

Students

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what regard she has and what consideration she gives in calculating student loans to students who are expected to continue their academic studies for considerable periods of the summer vacations and who are therefore excluded from being able to seek work; and what distinction she draws between students who are undertaking long courses financed by Erasmus or by commercial undertakings and students on medical courses who do not have access to this funding. [17515]

Mr. Boswell: An additional week's allowance, which forms part of the means-tested mandatory award, is available to students who attend their courses for longer than 30 weeks and three days in the academic year. The full-year loan rate is intended to provide support throughout the year. Any payments made to a student under the terms of the Erasmus scheme are disregarded as income for the purposes of calculating his award. Where a student receives payments by way of a bursary or remuneration from a commercial undertaking his award for the year may be reduced or extinguished, depending upon the value of the payments.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students in higher education are on courses which extend beyond the average academic year; how many would be regarded as being on long courses within the meaning of the rules for student loans; and what percentage of these are medical students. [17513]

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for what reason she declined to meet the chairman of the British Medical Association's medical student representatives. [17516]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Ms Jones) on Tuesday, 28 March 1995 Official Report, column 577.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what extra weeks allowances have been made available to medical students during 1994–95; by what percentage they were uprated; if the calculation on which the uprating has been based refers to the entire academic year or to the calendar year; what is the level of student finance available for a medical student during extra weeks and during ordinary weeks; why the distinction is made in the amount of money available over those two periods; what is the amount of money available in real terms for extra weeks and ordinary weeks; and if she will make a statement. [17514]

Mr. Boswell: Under the current Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations, the additional allowances in respect of extra attendance are: £74.05 per week for students living away from the parental home and studying in London; £55.45 per week for students living away from home and studying elsewhere; and £38.90 per week for students living at home. These rates were uprated by 4 per cent. over the 1993–94 allowances and the regulations apply to the year which began on 1 September 1994. The normal main rates of grant and additional allowances, as well as full and final year rates of student loans, are available to eligible medical students in the same way as for all other students. The extra weeks allowance is available for students who are required to attend their courses over and above a period of 30 weeks and three days in any academic year—25 weeks and three days in the case of courses at Oxford and Cambridge universities. There is no arithmetical connection between the extra weeks allowances and the corresponding main grant rates when those rates are expressed in weekly terms.

Science Courses (Women)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what steps her Department is taking to increase the number of women taking introductory courses in technology-based subjects; [16842]

(2) what steps her Department is taking to encourage women to pursue science courses in universities. [16386]

Mr. Boswell: The Government are committed to encouraging more young people, both men and women, to study science and technology. The proportion of women among undergraduate students in these subjects has risen from 31 per cent. in 1990–91 to 34 per cent. in 1992–93.

By requiring all pupils to study mathematics, science and technology to age 16, the national curriculum should lead to greater interest in these subjects among all pupils, including girls.

The new science general national vocational qualifications have widened the options available to all pupils, including girls. The latest available evidence suggests that 35 per cent. of GNVQ science students are female.

My right hon. Friend is not at present convinced that further special measures are needed specifically to increase recruitment of women and girls into the study of science and technology. She will, however, keep the matter under review.

Student Loans

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of students took up student loans in the last year for which figures are available. [15951]

Mr. Boswell: Some 430,000 students took out loans in the academic year 1993–94, which represents 47 per cent. of all eligible students.

EMPLOYMENT

Temporary Work

12. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the work force is engaged in temporary work; and what was the figure 10 years ago. [16024]

Mr. Paice: Estimates from the Labour Force Survey for Great Britain show that in spring 1994, 6.4 per cent. of employees were in temporary jobs, compared with 5.9 per cent. in spring 1984.

Minimum Wage

13. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to conduct research into the effects of a national minimum wage. [16025]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have looked at unemployment among young people in France at 23 per cent.—a country which has a national minimum wage—and concluded that no further research is necessary.

Low Pay

14. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals in the United Kingdom earn less than £3 per hour. [16026]

Mr. Oppenheim: The results of the latest New Earnings Survey show that some 42 full-time and part-time employees per 1,000 in Great Britain earn less than £3 per hour.

Training and Enterprise Councils

15. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the future funding of TECs. [16029]

Mr. Paice: A variety of representations.

25. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for further developing the role of the TECs in developing employment opportunities. [16019]

Mr. Paice: I press training and enterprise councils continually to achieve further improvements in effectiveness and value for money in all the activities that they are contracted to undertake.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest available information on the number of male and female directors of training and enterprise councils; how many are from (a) ethnic minority backgrounds and (b) the private sector; what information he has about which industrial sectors they come from; and how many of the non-private sector directors are from (i) local authorities, (ii) local education authorities, (iii) other educational organisations, (iv) trade unions, (v) voluntary organisations, (vi) ethnic minority organisations, (vii) employers' associations and (viii) others. [17868]

Mr. Paice: There are currently 814 male directors and 118 female directors on training and enterprise council boards. There are 79 chairmen and two chairwomen.

I am unable to provide the ethnic minority and industrial sector information as it is not held centrally. However, there are 704 directors from the private sector.

The total number of non-private sector directors is 309, and is broken down in the following table:

	Number
(i) Local authorities	110
(ii) Local education authorities	29
(iii) Other education authorities	32
(iv) Trade unions	58
(v) Voluntary organisations	37
(vi) Ethnic minority organisations	2
(vii) Employers associations	11
(viii) Others	30

Employment Agencies

16. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his objectives in the abolition of employment agency licensing. [16030]

Miss Widdecombe: Our objective in abolishing employment agency licensing was to reduce the financial and administrative burdens on the industry, while maintaining controls for the protection of agency users.

Objective 1 Funding

17. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what role his Department is playing in the application of objective 1 funding on Merseyside to the provision of employment and training. [16031]

Miss Widdecombe: The Department plays an important role in the partnership which is taking forward the objective 1 programme. This includes helping to ensure that European social fund funding is targeted at those people who are most in need of support.

Small Businesses (Disabled Employees)

18. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to encourage and assist small businesses of under 20 employees to employ disabled people. [16032]

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has taken to assist disabled people to obtain work in small companies; and if he will make a statement. [17405]

Mr. Paice: The Government encourage the recruitment of disabled people through its policy of educating and persuading employers to recognise the abilities of disabled people and by the promotion of good employment practice.

This is backed by practical help to both individuals and employers, including small employers, through a wide range of services and programmes. For example, the Employment Service's placing, assessment and counselling teams—PACTs—offer a comprehensive and local specialised service to help disabled people obtain and retain employment. PACTs also give advice to employers about recruitment and general practices relating to the employment of disabled people and promote the code of practice on the employment of disabled people. The disability symbol is now used by more than 1,200 employers of all sizes, all of whom have given a commitment to interview any disabled job applicant who meets the minimum criteria for a particular job vacancy.

In addition the access to work programme provides disabled people with a wide range of flexible help to overcome barriers to employment including employment in small companies. It can pay for a communicator at a job interview or at work for people who are deaf or have a hearing impairment; a reader or assistant for people who are blind or have a visual impairment; adaptions to vehicles or help towards taxi fares or other transport costs and equipment to suit particular needs and alterations to premises or working conditions.

Young People

19. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government are taking to improve the employment prospects of young people. [16013]

23. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government are taking to improve the employment prospects of young people. [16017]

Mr. Paice: Modern apprenticeships will add to the comprehensive range of education and training initiatives enabling young people to develop skills relevant to jobs now and in the future.

Unemployment

20. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are classified as long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement. [16014]

Mr. Oppenheim: In January 1995 on the unadjusted basis there were 927,078 people claimant unemployed for over a year—more than 150,000 fewer than a year ago.

22. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest unemployment figure;and if he will make a statement. [16016]

Mr. Oppenheim: United Kingdom seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment was 2,364,700 in February 1995—a fall of 607,000 since December 1992.

26. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those major countries in the European Union where the level of unemployment is on a clear downward trend. [16020]

Mr. Oppenheim: The United Kingdom is the only major European Union country where the unemployment rate on the internationally recognised International Labour Organisation basis has been falling steadily.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the long-term unemployed are benefiting from the Government's policies. [16407]

Miss Widdecombe: The Government's economic and labour market policies are increasing employment opportunities for everyone. The number of jobs increased by 262,000 last year. Long-term unemployed people are sharing the benefits. Last year the number unemployed for a year or more fell by 150,000. We are determined to continue this trend. This year we are making jobfinder's grant, workwise and 1-2-1 available nationally. We are extending community action and work trials. We are asking training and enterprise councils to focus training for work more sharply on getting people into jobs. And we are piloting jobmatch and extending workstart pilots. With the help of these measures we are confident that the Employment Service will meet its new target for 1995–96 of placing 560,000 people unemployed for six months or more into work.

Working Parents

21. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's policy on promotion of working practices which enable men to take an active role in the care of their children. [16015]

Miss Widdecombe: The Government encourage the introduction of flexible working arrangements including, for example, part-time work and job sharing which can help men and women combine employment with their family responsibilities.

24. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of lone mothers with dependent children are in work; and what were the equivalent figures in 1979. [16018]

Miss Widdecombe: The latest estimates from the Labour Force Survey for autumn 1994 show that the numbers of lone mothers in work has risen from 350,000 to 460,000. This represents 39 per cent. of lone mothers of working age with dependent children. The equivalent figure for spring 1981—the earliest date available—is 45 per cent.

28. Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his response to the Employment Select Committee's first report of Session 1994–95 on mothers in employment. [16022]

Miss Widdecombe: We are considering the report and will respond to the Committee in due course.

Take-home Pay

27. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the levels of real take-home pay currently and in 1979. [16021]

Mr. Oppenheim: Real take-home pay has increased significantly at all levels since 1979. For example, the average take-home pay of a single man at the bottom 10 per cent. of the earnings distribution has risen by 23 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

Older Workers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government's "Getting On" campaign has resulted in increased recruitment and retention of older workers; what figures are available; what plans he has to commission an independent evaluation of the campaign; and if he will make a statement. [17270]

Miss Widdecombe: When I launched the campaign on behalf of older workers a primary aim was to raise the profile of older workers and get the message across to employers that discrimination on the grounds of age was wasteful, shortsighted and bad business practice. I am pleased to say that we have placed older workers very clearly and firmly on the agenda.

I am glad to say that employers' attitudes are changing and that there is a greater recognition of the value of older workers. The "Getting On" booklet has attracted considerable interest since its launch in March 1993. Some 16,500 copies were issued to employers at that time, and over 8,000 have been requested subsequently by employers, researchers and individuals. Nearly 2,000 copies have been dispatched this year alone. In January this year I launched a booklet aimed at individuals, "Too Old . . . who says?". In addition to the copies being made available through Employment Service jobcentres, some 25,000 booklets have been requested.

The campaign which is still on-going will be evaluated in due course. However, it is too early to do so or to obtain reliable detailed measurements of its specific effects on recruitment and retention.

Employment Service Client Advisers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what way the pay or additional remuneration of employment service client advisers is related to the number or proportion of new or existing claimants whose applications for benefits payments are turned down or scaled back; and what direct link there is between client adviser remuneration and success in placing clients in work. [17818]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 4 April 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the extent to which the pay of Employment Service (ES) Client Advisers is related to the number of claimants whose applications for benefits payments are turned down or scaled back; and whether there is any direct link between Client Adviser remuneration and their success in placing clients in work.

Client Advisers are paid within a salary range which reflects the responsibilities of their posts. In keeping with Government policy, that pay and reward systems in the public sector should demonstrate a regular and direct link between a person's contribution to standards of service delivered and their reward, annual performance pay awards are determined by an individual's performance against a range of annual objectives.

The ES's overall operational objectives are set out in an Annual Performance Agreement and are translated into standards of performance which are set for Local Offices. An individual Client Adviser's objectives cover a range of expected outcomes, including placing clients into work and ensuring the accurate and timely payment of benefits, to those clients who meet the conditions for receiving them. Their objectives therefore contribute to the delivery of the Local Office standards of service, and hence the overall objectives of the ES, as set out in the Annual Performance Agreement.

Performance against those objectives is reviewed regularly and assessed annually, resulting in an Overall Performance Mark which reflects the degree to which an individual has exceeded, met, or not met the full range of objectives that they have been set.

In arriving at an overall assessment of a Client Advisers performance, no single objective is given greater prominence. It is therefore not possible to draw a direct correlation between the pay a Client Adviser receives and the number of clients whose applications for benefits payments are turned down, or scaled back, nor their success in placing clients in work.

I hope this is helpful.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the letter from Mr. Rimington CB of the Health and Safety Executive to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 25 January, what visits have taken place since 1989 to the Forth rail bridge by the Health and Safety Executive; what inspection the Health and Safety Executive has undertaken of the improvements suggested in 1989; if he will place in the Library the Health and Safety Executive's assessment of the use of water-based paint on the Forth rail bridge; and what evidence the Health and Safety Executive can adduce for its belief that Railtrack is fully committed to the well-being and preservation of the bridge and its attitude to safety. [16201]

Mr. Oppenheim: Health and Safety Executive inspectors made a number of visits to the bridge between 1989 and February 1995 to assess the precautions taken to protect workers and to confirm the safety of trains crossing the bridge. The Director General of HSE, Mr. Rimington CB, has asked Her Majesty's railway inspectorate to undertake a full assessment of the structural integrity of the bridge from the point of view of its continued safety and integrity. To the extent that the use of water-based paint has a bearing on these issues,it will be taken into account. HSE's assessment will be published.

Part-time Students

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many part-time students have lost their benefits through the present review by the employment offices. [16432]

Miss Widdecombe: There is no such review. Guidance was recently issued relating to the existing rules on part-time study. I have asked the chief executive of the Employment Service Agency to write to the hon. Member on this point; a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18323]

Miss Widdecombe: The number of posts lost to the Employment Service between 1 April 1993 and 31 March 1995 as a result of work being taken over by external contractors totalled 574.

The total reduction in posts within ES over the same period was 3,280. The main factor in this drop has been falling levels of unemployment, to which much ES staffing is related.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Household

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Natrional Heritage what was the cost at 1994 prices of (a) furnishing and (b) decoration, fixtures and fittings for the accommodation of each of the directors of the royal household.

Mr. Sproat: The following sums have been spent since 1 April 1991 on furnishing and equipment including furniture, curtains and soft furnishings, light fittings, refrigerators, washing machines, crockery and so on.

	Cash £	1994–95 prices £
The Master of the Household	30,000	31,287
The Comptroller, Lord Chamberlain's Office	112,000	121,754
The Director of Finance and Property Services	115,000	115,000
The Marshal of the Diplomatic Corps	53,000	55,839

Following a decision in 1994, furnishings and equipment are no longer paid for from public funds.

Decoration, fixtures and fittings are included in building contracts which, depending on the particular circumstances, may also cover modernisation of accommodation, rewiring, renewal of plumbing, fire alarms and so on. The total of these costs is:

	Cash £	1994–95 prices £
The Master of the Household	68,000	69,913
The Comptroller, Lord Chamberlain's Office	195,000	211,477
The Director of Finance and Property Services	142,000	143,380
The Marshal of the Diplomatic Corps	68,000	71,211

VAT and fees are included.

Costs incurred before the creation of the Royal Household Property Services Department in April 1991 would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Bosman v. UEFA et al

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the effect the outcome of the Bosman v. UEFA et al case in the European Court of Justice will have on association football in Great Britain. [17955]

Mr. Sproat: It is not possible to predict the verdict of the European Court of Justice in this case, and it would therefore be premature to seek to predict the consequences for association football. The Government are monitoring the position closely.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what submissions his Department presented to the European Court of Justice on behalf of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the case of Bosman v. UEFA et al. [17954]

Mr. Sproat: None.

Ground Safety

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to help fund sports ground safety work outside the Football League. [18912]

Mr. Sproat: I am pleased to announce that the trustees of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts have agreed to dedicate up to £8 million a year for sports ground safety work in rugby league, rugby union, cricket and, where appropriate, non-league football, from 6 May 1995. This follows the Government's decision to reduce pool betting duty by 5 per cent., which the pools companies have agreed should enable them to maintain their contributions to the foundation.

Grant aid will be distributed using the well established and effective machinery of the Football Trust. Further details will be announced shortly following consultation between the trust and the relevant sports governing bodies.

For smaller sports clubs with limited finances this is a significant development. For the first time, clubs outside football will be able to apply to the Football Trust for a contribution to carry out important safety work.

I have had many representations from other sports, and from football clubs in the Vauxhall Conference, who feel that they should be able to seek greater financial support from the trust for stadium redevelopment work.

Public Libraries

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress he has made in creating, in consultation with local authorities, a new council to advise him on his English public library responsibilities. [18813]

Mr. Dorrell: I announced on 7 October 1994 that I would be creating a new council to advise me on my specific responsibilities for libraries in England and principally on public library issues. I also said that I would be inviting local authorities to nominate members of the council.

Consultation with the local authority associations is now complete and I am establishing the new council, to be known as the Advisory Council on Libraries. It will take over with immediate effect the statutory responsibilities set out in the 1964 Public Libraries and Museums Act. The Library and Information Services Council (England) will be dissolved.

The council will initially have 11 members, including its chairman. All members will be appointed until 31 December 1996, when arrangements will be reviewed. The first chairman will be Mr. Michael Messenger, county librarian of Hereford and Worcester. The other members will be:

Councillor Lyn Brown—London Borough of Newham
Councillor Chris Heinitz—Wakefield Metropolitan Council
Councillor Elgar Jenkins—Bath District Council
Councillor Fanny Lines—Surrey County Council
Councillor Sally Marshall—Norfolk County Council
Mr. Keith Crawshaw—Director of Leisure Services and Head of Libraries, Sheffield City Council
Mr. John Hicks—County Librarian, Royal County of Berkshire
Dr. Bob McKee—Director of Libraries and Arts, Solihull Metropolitan Borough
Mr. Brian Burch—Librarian, University of Leicester
Dr. Gillian Cross—Author

The council's terms of reference will be as follows:

> "To advise the Secretary of State upon such matters connected with the provision or use of library facilities as set out in Section 2 of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

In particular, to advise the Secretary of State on:

> matters which fall directly within his responsibilities for English public libraries or which, through the direct responsibility of other Departments of Government, have a significant impact on those responsibilities;
> the allocation of direct grants and awards to English public libraries, or to other bodies or persons, so as to benefit and improve the provision of library facilities to members of the public;

> issues affecting providers and users of English public library services, and how consultation and co-operation between users and providers may be effectively promoted; > which aspects of public library services in England require detailed investigation and how such aspects might be examined and debated."

The council will be separate from the new Library and Information Commission, which will act as a forum for Government policy on library and information provision in general.

I am confident that, as a body in effect jointly owned by the Government and by those directly responsible for providing public library services, the advisory council will carry significant authority, and I wish it well in its work.

Lottery Scratch Cards

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with Camelot concerning the impact of the introduction of the national lottery scratch cards on the raising of money for medical research by charities using scratch cards; what review he will undertake of the overall funding of medical research by charitable fund-raising methods analogous to those used by national lottery; and if he will make a statement. [17999]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Camelot Group plc has always intended that the instant win game cards would be introduced as part of its overall promotion of the lottery. This development was included in its application for the licence to run the lottery and is expected to be an important factor in its achievement of the forecasts of revenue for the national lottery development fund which underlay its bid.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the Tenovus medical charity concerning compensation for lost medical research income from the operation of the national lottery; if he will make a statement on the compensation procedure available to charities adversely affected by the lottery; and what consultations he has with Oflot and Camelot concerning the impact of the lottery on charitable fund raising. [18037]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 April 1995]: During the passage of the National Lottery etc. Bill, the Government undertook to monitor charitable income once the national lottery was established.

Telephone Inquiry Lines

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17449]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Department of National Heritage does not operate any special public information inquiry services of this kind.

Privacy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of National Heritage (1) what plans he has to introduce legislation to create new criminal offences to prohibit certain types of physical intrusion, harassment and covert surveillance; and if he will make a statement; [17256]

(2) what plans he has to introduce legislation to implement the recommendations for criminal offences and for new civil wrongs which were contained in the report of the committee of privacy and related matters chaired by Sir David Calcutt QC; and if he will make a statement. [17258]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Government's conclusions on proposals for new measures to prevent intrusion and protect privacy will be set out in our response to the National Heritage Select Committee's report on privacy and media intrusion. This will be published when we have completed our consideration of the issues relating to the proposed criminal and civil remedies.

Press Complaints

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to introduce a statutory regime for dealing with complaints against the press; and if he will make a statement. [17257]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Government believe that self-regulation is preferable to a statutory regime for dealing with complaints against the press. We look to the newspaper industry and the Press Complaints Commission to vindicate their claim that self-regulation can be made effective. We will announce our conclusions in our response to the report of the National Heritage Select Committee on privacy and media intrusion.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review the legislation governing eligibility for concessionary television licences. [17408]

Mr. Dorrell: As indicated in the White Paper, "The Future of the BBC", published last July, the concessionary television licence scheme was thoroughly reviewed in 1988, prior to the introduction of the current regulations. The Government have no plans for any further review of the scheme.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17729]

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of National Heritage is currently setting up a Internet electronic mail pilot and the arrangements for handling electronic mail to Ministers and the Department are under consideration. Electronic mail addresses have not yet been created.

The Department is monitoring developments in the area of the information super-highway and is involved in the DTI multimedia forum, the G7 information society activity, and with developments in the areas of broadcasting and other media services. A number of the Department's sponsored bodies are working on information super-highway issues and applications, and the Department is liaising with them, other interested Departments such as CCTA, and our partners in the European Union.

National Lottery

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the forecast for Camelot's profit for the first year of operating the national lottery; and if he will make a statement. [17801]

Mr. Dorrell: This is an operational matter for the Director General of the National Lottery. I have therefore asked him to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the effect of the national lottery on the demand for goods; what forecast he has made of the amount which will be spent by consumers on the lottery in 1995–96 and the percentage taken in taxation; and what forecast he has made of the number of prizes and the income to Camelot in 1995–96. [17186]

Mr. Dorrell: Lottery duty is set at 12 per cent. Forecasts of sales of national lottery tickets, the number of national lottery prizes and the income to Camelot in 1995–96 are all matters for the licensed operator, Camelot Group plc. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer published his economic forecast in the Red Book.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives of the agencies are best placed to provide answers. I have accordingly asked the chief executives of HM Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office to reply direct. The Court Service was not an agency in the period covered by the question but became an executive agency on 3 April 1995.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question relating to jobs taken over by contractors or that have disappeared in the last two years in the Public Record Office.

16.5 posts were taken over by contractors in the last two years.

No jobs have disappeared.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning jobs that have been lost to agencies in the last two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors, and (b) disappeared. I can provide the following information:-

Her Majesty's Land Registry, which is a separate government department of the Lord Chancellor, was established as an Executive Agency in July 1990. Because of the slump in property market activity since the boom in the 1980s the Registry has consistently reduced its staff in post since 1989.

(a) 15 posts have been taken over by contractors or been redeployed as a result of the Registry's market testing programme.

(b) the number of staff employed by the Land Registry has reduced by 893 through natural wastage and voluntary early retirement.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from S. Hutcheson to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary question, listed on 30 March 1995, regarding jobs which have either been taken over by contractors or disappeared.

The Public Trust Office had a total of 585 staff when it became an Executive Agency on 1 July 1994 and since then has not had any posts taken over by contractors.

As a result of the market testing of the Typing Services in the Public Trust Office in 1993, prior to our move to Agency status, there was a reduction of two typing manager and six typing posts.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Detective Agencies

Mr. Denham: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply of 23 March, if he will list all private detective agencies, other than Brays Detective Agency, which have been retained by the Treasury Solicitors since 1993, in each case giving the Government Department concerned, the purpose of the contract with the detective agency and the total expenditure to date. [17355]

The Attorney-General: The agencies listed in the table have been used by the Treasury Solicitor on a case by case basis in the financial year 1994–95. The main services provided by the agencies have been: service of process, investigation of the whereabouts and financial status of debtors and other defendants, collection of evidence, and inquiries relating to personal injury claims.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the jobs that have been lost to the agency in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18329]

The Attorney-General: No posts have been lost to the Government Property Lawyers' Agency since it was established in April 1993, whether as a result of contracting out or otherwise.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has received from the Director General of Fair Trading about the bus industry since deregulation, and what particular advice he has received with regard to Stagecoach plc and Mainline. [18319]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade whether or not to refer mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and, where mergers have been referred, on action to take after the MMC has reported. He also gives advice on action to take following MMC monopoly and Competition Act reports. He has advised accordingly on all MMC reports involving the bus industry since deregulation in October 1986. The DGFT's advice on the MMC report on the Stagecoach Holdings plc/Mainline Partnership Ltd merger was that Stagecoach should be required to divest its 20 per cent. shareholding in Mainline.

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigations there have been involving Stagecoach plc since bus deregulation; and on how many occasions he has accepted, rejected or altered the recommendation from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; [18317]

(2) how many Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigations there have been into the bus industry since bus deregulation; and on how many occasions he accepted, rejected or altered the recommendation from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [18318]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Since bus deregulation in October 1986, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has undertaken 15 enquiries relating to the bus industry, including one case where the MMC has yet to report and two where their reports have not yet been published. Eight of these inquiries involved Stagecoach. In all cases so far published Ministers accepted the MMC's findings but in three merger cases, all involving Stagecoach, Ministers asked the Director General of Fair Trading to negotiate undertakings which went further than the MMC recommended; these cases were Stagecoach/Portsmouth Citybus, Stagecoach/Formia and Stagecoach/Mainline Partnership Ltd.

Directors (Disqualification)

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons he would not proceed with a recommendation to disqualify an individual as a company director. [18315]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Secretary of State would not proceed with a recommendation to disqualify if he felt that there was insufficient evidence to show that the director's conduct made him unfit to be concerned in the management of a limited company. Proceedings would also not be instituted where it was felt that it would not be in the public interest to do so.

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many recommendations he has received in the past year to disqualify individuals as company directors; how many he has approved; and how many he has rejected. [18314]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: During the year ended 28 February 1995 the Secretary of State has in respect of England and Wales dealt with the following:

	Official receiver	Insolvency practitioner
Reports received in the past year (companies)	273	3,238
Proceedings authorised (directors)	307	470
Reports not accepted (companies)	22	2,715

Although some of the reports received in any given year will be dealt with in that year there will be cases carried over to the next year. Accordingly the numbers of reports received, not accepted and proceedings authorised will not correlate.

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he uses in deciding whether to disqualify an individual as a company director. [18316]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Secretary of State when deciding whether to institute disqualification proceedings has regard to the matters for determining unfitness of directors as detailed in schedule 1 to the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986, and also those matters which the courts have held to constitute unfit conduct in numerous judgments since 1986.

Having established that there is evident of unfit conduct, proceedings will then be taken if it is in the public interest to do so.

Non-fossil Fuel Option

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will announce the timetable for NFFO 4 bids. [18265]

Mr. Page: I am currently considering the arrangements for the fourth Renewables Order, in consultation with the renewables generation industry, and I hope to be able to make an initial announcement about the order later this year.

Scotch Whisky Exports (South Africa)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent negotiations his Department has held with brandy producers in South Africa in respect of the level of duties being levied against Scotch whisky. [16374]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The British High Commission in South Africa has supported the representations made to the Board on Tariffs and Trade by Scotch whisky producers and the Scotch Whisky Association pressing for rejection of the application made by domestic brandy producers for increase of duty on imported spirits. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade raised the issue with the Government of South Africa during his visit to South Africa last week. We have had no direct contact with South African brandy producers.

Electricity and Telephone Lines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what his Department does to encourage the siting underground of new and existing power lines for electricity and telephone infrastructure. [17894]

Mr. Page: The placing of electricity lines above ground or below ground is in the first instance a matter for the licence holder concerned. The Government expect such lines to be placed underground whenever it is safe and practicable to do so at a cost which would not lay too heavy a burden on the general body of consumers. This applies particularly to the low voltage network, about 80 per cent. of which is already underground. Electricity companies have a policy of placing cables underground where economically possible and schemes to underground existing overhead lines have been implemented in various villages. With certain limited exceptions, Telecommunications Act licences require that new telecommunications lines and apparatus, the siting considerations for which are broadly equivalent to those for low voltage electricity lines, shall be installed underground other than in the case of emergency work. Telecommunications operators are also required to consider carefully requests to resite existing lines underground.

Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tonnage of coal was imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [17831]

Mr. Page: The total quantities of coal imported into the United Kingdom over the past 10 years were:

Year	Thousand tonnes
1985	12,732
1986	10,554
1987	9,781
1988	11,685
1989	12,137
1990	14,783
1991	19,611
1992	20,339
1993[1]	18,400
1994[1]	15,850

[1] Figures for 1993 and 1994 are provisional and include a small element of estimation. The latest figures on coal imports are available in the Department of Trade and Industry's bulletin "Energy Trends".

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tonnage of coal was (a) deep mined and (b) opencast mined in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [17832]

Mr. Page: The quantities of coal produced in the United Kingdom in the past 10 years were:

	Thousand tonnes
Year	Deepmined	Opencast	[1]Total
1985	75,289	15,569	94,111
1986	90,366	14,275	108,099
1987	85,957	15,786	104,533
1988	83,762	17,899	104,066
1989	79,628	18,657	99,820
1990	72,899	18,134	92,762
1991	73,357	18,636	94,202
1992	65,800	18,187	84,493
1993	50,457	17,006	68,199
1994[2]	31,102	16,614	48,030

[1] Includes an estimate for slurry.

[2] Figures for 1994 are provisional. The latest figures on coal production are available in the Department of Trade and Industry's bulletin, "Energy Trends".

Chernobyl Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what is the latest information available about the condition of the Chernobyl nuclear plant including assessment of the risks of further accident; and what progress has been made to secure international action to finance a programme to make secure and then decommission the site. [17478]

Mr. Page: The safety of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant is the responsibility of the relevant authorities in Ukraine. Only they would be able to provide full details on the current safety status of the plant. A European Union funded feasibility study has recently reported on options for dealing with the shelter over the remains of the destroyed unit 4. This was not an in-depth safety assessment of the Chernobyl plant as a whole.

In the light of international concerns over the safety situation at Chernobyl, G7 Heads of Government proposed an action plan at the 1994 Naples economic summit. The plan aims to secure early closure of the remaining units at Chernobyl within the framework of a sound long-term energy sector strategy for Ukraine. G7 leaders agreed to provide $200 million to support the action plan. The EU has promised 100 million ECU from its TACIS technical assistance programme and 400 million ECU from the Euratom loans facility. Work on the action plan is currently being taken forward by a G7/Ukraine task force which is due to report shortly.

EC Trading Restrictions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers enable him to initiate, approve, disapprove, or prevent executive action by the European Community or Union to restrict or vary trading arrangements with third countries (a) where no treaties or other agreement schemes exist and (b) when they do. [18036]

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Trading arrangements with third countries are governed by EC Council Regulations 3030/93, 517/94, 519/94 and 3285/94, made under article 113 of the EC treaty in implementation of the common commercial policy. They may be amended by qualified majority in the EC Council, but any amendment must be consistent with the EC's bilateral and multilateral obligations to third countries, including GATT. They all provide for the taking of measures to safeguard EC interests against import surges in specific circumstances. Any member state may initiate the procedures for such measures; the procedures vary, but in all cases the measures may be either approved or disapproved by qualified majority in the EC Council. The position is essentially the same in respect of third countries with which the EC has preferential trading agreements.

TREASURY

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17030]

Mr. Nelson: The analysis sought of all legislation introduced by the Departments responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer since 1965 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member. References are frequently made in legislation to officers of state and general references are occasionally made to persons who are Members of one or other of the Houses of Parliament.

Overtime Payments

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each Government Department the total amount paid in overtime payments for each of the last three years. [18064]

Sir George Young: This information is not held centrally. Each Department is responsible for determining its own overtime payment schemes for eligible grades within its running cost limits.

Bank of England

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what qualifications by examination were held by Mr. Pennant-Rea at the time he was appointed Deputy Chairman of the Bank of England; [17829]

(2) what posts were held by Mr. Pennant-Rea in the 10 years before he was appointed Deputy Chairman of the Bank of England; and what assessment he has made of Mr. Pennant-Rea's suitability for the post of Deputy Governor; [17827]

(3) on whose recommendation Mr. Pennant-Rea was appointed Deputy Chairman of the Bank of England. [17828]

Mr. Nelson: At the time he was appointed Deputy Governor, Mr. Pennant-Rea held a BA degree in economics from Trinity college Dublin and MA degree in economics from Manchester university.

Mr. Pennant-Rea is an experienced economist who has managed a leading international economics newspaper. From 1977 to 1986, he was a journalist on The Economist. This included spells on secondment to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development as editor of "World Development Report". From 1986 until 1993 he was the editor of "The Economist" and a director of The Economist Newspaper Group Inc.

Mr. Pennant-Rea was appointed Deputy Governor on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. As with all appointments at this level, it was made following wide consultation.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established, and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17452]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 3 April 1995]: No specific public information telephone inquiry lines operate in the Treasury. Calls are handled by the public inquiry room or the press office as appropriate.

VAT (Services)

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given to the fixing of different VAT thresholds for businesses supplying services as opposed to those supplying goods; and if he will make a statement. [17696]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The application of different thresholds for businesses supplying services as opposed to businesses supplying goods has been considered on a number of occasions. Where mixed supplies are involved the introduction of different thresholds would create significant operational problems and therefore the preferred option is to maintain the simplicity of a single threshold.

Income Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) of

3 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1283–84 on the tax liabilities of taxpayers in different income bands, giving figures for 1995–96 and estimates for 1996–97 based on the assumption of statutory indexation and including measures announced in the 1994 budget. [15677]

Sir George Young [holding answer 23 March 1995]: I regret that the earlier reply contained an incorrect table for 1995–96. An updated version of this table is as follows. The 1987–88 income tax regime has been indexed to 1995–96 levels by reference to the statutory formula and allowing for the effect of independent taxation of husbands and wives. Average earnings have increased by nearly 15 per cent. in real terms since 1987–88. Etimates for 1996–97 are not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesian Police

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 84, on what date he asked for assurances prior to scholarship awards being granted to officers of the Indonesian police force that none of those officers had previously served in East Timor. [16661]

Mr. Baldry: No assurances were sought.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 367, regarding his Department's funding of training and scholarship awards for members of the Indonesian police force if the biographical details required by his Department reveal as a matter of routine (i) whether the applicant has ever served in East Timor and (ii) whether the applicant will serve East Timor after training; on which date officials in his Department last conducted an assessment of the work performance of applicants; to what extent this assessment was dependent on information provided by the Indonesian police force; on which date officials in his Department last conducted interviews with applicants prior to their leaving Indonesia to test their suitability to take part in the Indonesian police training project; and what specific questions applicants were asked about their past activities with regard to human rights considerations. [16513]

Mr. Baldry: Candidates for United Kingdom scholarships under the police project submit biographical details which cover their employment history. These would normally but not invariably include the locations in which the officer has served, but would not include the locations of prospective employment once involvement in the project is complete.

Interviews are conducted by the UK project consultants at the outset when applicants join the consultancy unit. Their approach to policing and commitment to public service is assessed. Candidates for UK training are subsequently and independently re-assessed by the consultants in further interviews on the basis of work performance. The last date that this was done was during the visit by the UK consultants between 8 and 28 January 1995.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 84, if the commitment given by the Indonesian police force to his Department that officers who receive scholarship awards under the police project will remain with the project for a minimum of five years includes the assurance (a) that no such officer will be eligible to serve in East Timor during that time and (b) that no such officer will be eligible to serve in East Timor after their five years in the project is complete. [16663]

Mr. Baldry: It does not.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 111, what sources other than the Indonesian national police force have provided information that no officer who has received any form of training paid for or provided with assistance from his Department has subsequently gone on to serve in East Timor either during that period of training or after it has concluded. [16509]

Mr. Baldry: The project managers have also provided this information about trainees financed under the police project.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, column 85, if the biographical material provided to his Department about Indonesian police officers who have received scholarship awards or other training paid for by his Department reveal the dates when officers served in East Timor; and if they were based within that country. [16662]

Mr. Baldry: This information is no longer available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 March, Official Report, column 85, what sources other than the Indonesian national police force provided information to the United Kingdom managers of the Indonesian national police project that Indonesian police officers who have received scholarships or training paid for by his Department have not subsequently served in East Timor. [16660]

Mr. Baldry: From their own knowledge of the project and the trainees, the UK managers of the police project were able independently to confirm this information about trainees financed under the police project.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Secretary General of the Commonwealth about actions that should be taken to improve the situation in Sierra Leone. [17821]

Mr. Baldry: While we have received no representations, we are in regular contact with the Commonwealth Secretariat and strongly support the efforts of Chief Anyaoku to encourage peace talks between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what joint discussions have taken place with other European Governments about action that should be taken to improve the situation in Sierra Leone. [17823]

Mr. Baldry: We keep in close and regular contact with our EU partners about developments in Sierra Leone. EU aid to Sierra Leone covers a wide range of humanitarian and development projects. In addition 15 million ECU has been allocated so far this year for democratisation, rehabilitation of war-affected areas, and demobilisation of soldiers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recommendations he has received from the UN Secretary-General about action that should be taken to improve the situation in Sierra Leone. [17822]

Mr. Baldry: While we have received no recommendations, we are in regular contact with the UN Secretariat to discuss the situation in Sierra Leone. We are also providing some logistical support for the UN Secretary-General's special representative in Freetown.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to ensue that (a) British aid for Sri Lanka designated for the north and the east of the island is able to get through; and (b) aid is used for the rehabilitation of refugees and repair of the infrastructure. [16755]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 April 1995]: UK aid for the north and east is being delivered as intended. A consignment of medical equipment was delivered to Jaffna hospital at the end of last year and equipment for the University of Jaffna is due to arrive there this week. UK support for the relief and rehabilitation of displaced communities from the north and east is managed by Oxfam and the Save the Children fund using local Sri Lankan non-governmental organisations. Contributions have additionally been made through the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Government of Sri Lanka about the restoration of transport systems, gas and electricity supplies for the whole country and about the lifting of the economic embargo by the Sri Lankans on food and medicines. [16756]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 April 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, was briefed on the peace process, including relief measures for the people of Jaffna, by President Kumaratunga when she visited London in March. Many items have been removed from the embargo list. Food and medicines are not on the list. We have said that the British Government could offer consultancy assistance regarding power reconstruction requirements for Jaffna to help identify the scope of work likely to be necessary.

European Development Fund

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Foreign Ministers meeting on 18 and 19 March in relation to the size of the eighth European development fund for 1995 to 2000. [18212]

Mr. Baldry: EU Foreign Ministers had a short discussion on 18 and 19 March on the size of the eighth European development fund, but reached no decision. There will be further discussions at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10–11 April.

Nuclear Reactor, Slovakia

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government has made of whether the European bank for reconstruction and development has established that detailed and satisfactory plans have been made for the safe storage of radioactive waste produced during the proposed operation of the nuclear power plant at Mochovce, Slovakia. [16108]

Mr. Baldry: The bank's project documentation indicates that adequate technical, environmental and financial provision has been made for the short and medium-term safe storage of spent fuel and other radioactive wastes. The Slovak Government are considering plans for final storage facilities, provision of which would be covenanted in a project agreement between the bank and Slovenske Elektrarne, the Slovak power utility.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's position on the projections for gas prices, decommissioning costs, discount rates and variable currency exchange rates for Mochovce nuclear power plant in Slovakia contained in the least cost study prepared for the European bank for reconstruction and development's directors. [16109]

Mr. Baldry: We are examining the least cost study and comments made on it by a number of organisations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether the recurring problems relating to fire protection and essential operational, emergency and control systems associated with Soviet VVER-440/213 nuclear reactor design can be resolved by superimposing other technologies as proposed for the completion of the Mochovce nuclear power plant in Slovakia. [16110]

Mr. Baldry: The safety review of the Mochovce plant undertaken by Riskaudit examined these aspects and made recommendations for their improvement. It confirmed that the standards applied for the management and operation of the plant are fully in line with the fundamental principles set out in relevant International Atomic Energy Agency documents. It also confirmed that the proposed project safety measures, including the recommendations included in the safety review, would make the Mochovce plant acceptable under good western practices.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to whether the specification for the proposed Mochovce nuclear plant would satisfy the environmental and safety standards required for equivalent plant operating in the United Kingdom. [16111]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 21 February at column 130.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conclusions the Government's review of its policy on the European bank for reconstruction and development's proposed funding for the Mochovce nuclear power plant in Slovakia, has reached; and what assessment he has made as to whether the completion of the plant or alternative supply and demand-side measures represent the least cost option. [16112]

Mr. Baldry: We have not yet finalised our position on this project.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Patrol Vehicles (Accidents)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many road traffic accidents involving police patrol vehicles have been reported to the Metropolitan police for each year since 1991; and how many people have sustained injuries as a result. [16408]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner that the following is the information requested.

Year	Number of accidents	Number of injuries
1991	4,150	1,037 (366)
1992	4,143	1,028 (710)
1993	4,246	1,203 (831)
1994	4,063	1,179 (855)

The figures shown in parenthesis in the last column are the numbers of civilians injured; the remainder of the total in each case are police officers.

Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women who are currently imprisoned have their babies with them in prison. [18007]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many women who are currently imprisoned have their babies with them in prison.

On 31 March 1994 51 women had their babies with them in the three prison mother and baby units.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the rules applying at Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton allow prisoners and relatives to talk in (a) Irish and (b) their first language; [17663]

(2) what rules apply in Her Majesty's prisons in the United Kingdom about prisoners, whose first language is not English, being allowed to converse in their first language with visitors. [17666]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Max Madden, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the rules which apply to prisoners, whose first language is not English, being allowed to converse in their first language with visitors and if the rules applying at Full Sutton Prison allow prisoners and relatives to talk in Irish and their first language.

Under the provisions of Prison Service Standing Order 5, which applies to all prisons in England and Wales, prisoners and their visitors may speak in the language of their choice. If it is necessary to do so for security reasons, the Standing Order provides either for communication to be in English or for an interpreter to be present or for communications to be tape recorded.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received about prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Whitemoor complaining about verbal and physical abuse. [17664]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Max Madden, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about complaints made by prisoners of physical and verbal abuse.

Prisoners make allegations about verbal or physical abuse from time to time in many prison establishments. Depending on the nature and seriousness of the allegations these are investigated either by the police or internally within the Prison Service, and where they are substantiated, appropriate action is taken.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 15 March, Official Report, column 573, in which adult female Prison Service establishment the females under 18 years of age were being held. [18003]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question (following my answer to the honourable member for Nottingham South of 15 March, Official Report, column 573) in which adult female Prison Service establishments the females under 18 years of age were being held.

The information requested is given in the attached table.

Females aged under 18 years held in adult female establishments on 31 January 1995, by Prison Service establishment

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) women and (b) men are currently imprisoned in British prison service establishments. [18032]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many (a) women and (b) men are currently imprisoned in British prison service establishments.

On 24 March 1995 there were 57,254 persons (55,068 men and 2,186 women) in prison establishments in England, Wales and Scotland.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men served custodial sentences in each year since 1989, broken down by type of offence committed. [17207]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 4 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many men served custodial sentences in each year since 1989, broken down by type of offence committed.

Information for 1989 to 1992 is published in Prison Statistics England and Wales [Cm 2581, Tables 3.7 (young offenders) and 4.9 (adults) of the 1992 edition] a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Provisional information for 1993 and 1994 is contained in the attached table.

Number of men received into Prison Service custody for immediate custodial sentences in 1993 and 1994, by type of offence[1]

Offence group	1993	1994
Violence against the person	7,213	8,275
Sexual offences	1,882	1,888
Burglary	9,441	10,624
Robbery	3,067	2,800
Theft and handling	8,314	10,098
Fraud and forgery	1,573	1,794
Drugs offences	2,890	3,091
Other offences	11,879	15,605
Offence not recorded	3,445	4,131
All offences	49,704	58,306

[1] Excluding fine defaulters.

Child Prostitutes (Bosnia)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce measures to make it a criminal offence for citizens of the United Kingdom to make use of child prostitutes in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement. [17695]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Government condemn the sexual exploitation and abuse of children wherever it occurs. There would, however, be considerable practical difficulties in implementing any system of extended jurisdiction over such offences.

British Transport Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussion his department has had with the Department of Transport on extending the powers and jurisdiction of the British Transport police and if he will make a statement. [17470]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Transport Police (Jurisdiction) Act 1994 confines the jurisdiction of the British Transport police to railway property or to railway matters. During the passage of the legislation, an undertaking was given that officials from the Department of Transport and the Home Office would look again at this issue. This is being pursued.

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what obstacles there are preventing Irish nationals, convicted to serve custodial sentences in United Kingdom prisons, from being transferred to prisons in the Irish Republic; how many such prisoners there are in Her Majesty's prisons in Britain; how many have been transferred to prisons in the Irish Republic since 1 September 1994; and if he will make a statement. [17662]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: There are 703 prisoners currently imprisoned in England and Wales who gave their nationality on reception into prison as Irish. The transfer of prisoners between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland is not possible. The United Kingdom ratified the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons in 1985. The Republic of Ireland is a signatory to the convention but has yet to ratify it.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that his ministerial management information system for establishing objectives for his Department includes deregulation objectives (a) for him and (b) for each of the Ministers within his Department. [15566]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I am the Minister responsible for deregulation in the Home Office, and as such ensure that progress is maintained on deregulation. In the last 12 months, changes have been made to legislation affecting shopping hours, liquor licensing, charities, and betting and gaming and further changes are planned.

Against this background, the Department's planning systems give proper prominence to our deregulation programme.

Turkish Asylum Applicants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total numbers of asylum applications received from Turkish nationals for each of the last 24 months; and what was the outcome of these applications. [18306]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information on asylum applications by Turkish nationals and on decisions made, for the last 24 months, is given in the table.

Decisions on applications for asylum(1) received from nationals of Turkey in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, March 1993 to February 1995

Passport Requirements (Ireland)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to review the common travel area between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic with a view to requiring those travelling between both countries to show their passports; and if he will make a statement. [18423]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have no plans to review the operation of the common travel area between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to require those travelling between Britain and Northern Ireland to show their passports; and if he will make a statement. [18424]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Foreign Minister of the Irish Republic about the effects on the future of the common travel area between the United Kingdom and the Republic following the Republic signing the Schengen agreement; and if he will make a statement. [18422]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None. The Republic of Ireland is not a signatory to the Schengen agreement.

Prison Rules

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on his proposed changes to the prison rules. [18767]

Mr. Howard: I have today tabled amendments to the prison and young offender rules which, subject to the negative resolution procedure, will come into force in 21 days.

The amendments cover three areas: governors' disciplinary powers; the arrangements for the temporary release of prisoners; and contact between convicted and unconvicted prisoners.

The amendments will increase by 50 per cent. the maximum level of all governors' disciplinary punishments for prisoners, except for the maximum period of cellular confinement, which was increased from three to 14 days in 1994. The new maximum punishments with figures for young offenders in brackets where different, will be:

	Present	Proposed
Additional days	28	42
Cellular confinement (days)	14 [7]	no change
Stoppage of earnings (days' earnings)	28 [14]	42 [21]
Forfeiture of privileges (days)	28 [14]	42 [21]
Exclusion from associated work or activity (days)	14	21
Extra work—young offenders and adult females only (days)	14	21
Removal from wing—young offenders only (days)	14	21

These increases will act as a greater deterrent to prisoners; allow governors to punish the more serious offences properly; reduce the number of cases which need to be referred to the police; and maintain confidence in the disciplinary system.

The amendments will also introduce new criteria under which prisoners may be released temporarily. Under the new rules those prisoners who are eligible may be temporarily released only in the following circumstances:

(i) on specified compassionate grounds (compassionate licence);

(ii) to enable prisoners to undertake education, training or work experience and for specific official purposes, such as to appear as police witnesses (facility licence);

(iii) to allow prisoners who are near the end of their sentence to maintain their family ties and to re-integrate into the community (resettlement licence).

The new rules will also ensure that prisoners are not released too early in their sentence nor too frequently. In order to protect the safety of the public, governors will undertake in each case a rigorous risk assessment before deciding whether to release a prisoner temporarily. Eligible prisoners will be released only if the governor is satisfied that they will comply with the conditions of their licence.

Transitional arrangements have been made for some categories of prisoners. For example, those who have already successfully completed periods of home leave, and who are within a year of eligibility for parole, will continue to be eligible for resettlement licence. Prisoners who have been granted temporary release for work, education and training courses will generally continue to be eligible for facility licence to continue their courses, provided that the courses cannot be provided within the prison.

The amendments will also relax the current restriction on contact between convicted and unconvicted prisoners, which will allow accommodation and regime facilities to be used more flexibility.

Crime Prevention Schemes (Wales)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on crime prevention schemes by his Department in Wales last year. [17972]

Mr. Maclean: The Merthyr Tydfil safer cities project supported 29 crime prevention schemes during 1994–95 with £100,000 of Home Office grant funding. This figure does not include the contractor's costs for managing the project.

Police Establishment (Gloucestershire)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received over police establishment levels in Gloucestershire. [17645]

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no specific representations about Gloucestershire's approved establishment. Since the beginning of the year, correspondence about policing levels has been received from one hon. member and five members of the public.

Licensed Premises

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish regulations relating to trading on Sundays in licensed premises holding off-licences. [17485]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Licensing (Sunday Hours) Bill will amend the licensing law in England and Wales to permit the sale of alcohol at off-licensed premises from 10am to 10.30pm on Sundays. Large shops with off-licences, which are subject to limits on their hours of trading under the Sunday Trading Act 1994, will be entitled to sell alcohol throughout the time the 1994 Act permits them to open. We do not at present plan to publish any special regulations for businesses whose trade and customers will benefit from the Bill.

Housing Benefit (Prisoners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Social Security about his plan to reduce housing benefit to prisoners and on how this would affect the number of offences committed by these individuals. [17504]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposal has been the subject of routine exchanges between Ministers and officials of the two Departments about its implementation.

Gloucestershire Fire Services

Mr. George Howarth : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received over the standard spending assessment settlement for the Gloucestershire Fire Authority; and if he will list them. [17647]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a letter from an hon. Member enclosing one from a constituent who was concerned about provision for the fire service in Gloucestershire.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the numbers of jobs which will be lost in (a) the Gloucestershire fire brigade and (b) the Gloucestershire police as a result of the funding formula. [17648]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend is unable to make any such estimate. Any fire authority wishing to reduce the operational capability of its brigade, including the number of firefighting posts, must seek his approval under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947; but no such request for approval has been received. The Secretary of State's practice is to grant approval only where he is satisfied that the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover will be maintained. So far as the Gloucestershire police are concerned, with the abolition of police force establishment controls from 31 March 1995, responsibility for staffing matters such as these has been devolved to chief constables.

Community Sentences

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has supporting the Government's proposals advanced in the Green Paper on the nature of community sentences; when the White Paper on this subject will be published; and if he will take into account evidence and recommendations from the probation service in this report. [17502]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Under the current legislation, the courts are able to choose from a limited range of community orders when determining a community sentence. A new integrated sentence would give clear practical benefits to the courts, including greater choice and flexibility in the type of punishment served, better matched to the circumstances of the individual offence or offences, as well as more say in the way these punishments are carried out.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to publish a White Paper, but will consider carefully the results of the public consultation, including any comments from the probation service.

Crime Statistics

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of crimes committed in each year since 1989 (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of crime recorded for each of those years; [17226]

(2) how many of the offences estimated by his Department to have been committed in 1993 were recorded. [17227]

Mr. Maclean: Information on crimes committed can be obtained from the British crime survey—BCS—but only for the years 1981, 1983, 1987, 1991 and 1993. A comparison of BCS figures of offences committed in these years with statistics of crimes recorded by the police, can be made only for offences against individuals and their property. These figures are contained in the table:

Comparison of British Crime Survey and notifiable offences recorded by the police

Year	Crimes committed (BCS estimates) (thousands)	Crimes recorded by the police (thousands)	Percentage recorded of committed
1981	6,538	1,466	22
1983	7,187	1,639	23
1987	8,499	2,070	24
1991	9,763	2,897	30
1993	11,567	3,090	27

Note:

Offences included are: Acquisitive crime: burglary, theft of and from vehicles (including attempts), bicycle thefts, thefts from the person. Vandalism: household property and vehicles. Violence: wounding and robbery.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the criminal injuries compensation board used Mr. Richard Beattie to carry out psychological assessments on its behalf in the last five years; and how much the board paid for Mr. Beattie's work. [17268]

Mr. Maclean: Although my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland have joint responsibility for oversight of the criminal injuries compensation scheme, the day-to-day administration of the scheme and the handling of individual cases is a matter for the board itself, to which the hon. Member should direct his inquiries.

Immigration

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals, by nationality, have been (a) apprehended and (b) subsequently debarred from entry to the United Kingdom on board Eurostar trains since the inception of channel tunnel services. [17012]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Between November 1994 and 30 March 1995, 378 persons have been required to submit to further examination. Their apparent country of origin was as follows:

Overseas Prisons

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list visits he has made to prison establishments in other countries since his appointment as Home Secretary; what was the duration of these visits; and if he will make a statement on the discussions he had with the prison authorities at each of these prisons. [16762]

Mr. Howard: During a visit to the United States in January this year I visited the following establishments:

Date		Establishment
2 January 1995	(0930–1115)	Hernando County Jail, Brookeville, Florida
4 January 1995	(0830–1030)	Lockhart Work Programme Facility, Texas
4 January 1995	(1100–1330)	Kyle Pre-lease Centre, Texas
5 January 1995	(1000–1030)	Harris County Sheriff's Department Boot Camp

It is not my practice to disclose details of discussions I may have had.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other countries relating to prisons in the last three years. [16764]

Mr. Howard: It is not usual practice to disclose details of discussions of this kind.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits abroad each Secretary of State has made in each year since 1990. [16765]

Mr. Howard: In so far as central records are held, they show the following:

	Visits
1990:
Mr. Waddington	4
1991:

SCOTLAND

Strathclyde Passenger Transport Executive

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow the shadow unitary authorities in Strathclyde a say in the duration and value of any contracts awarded after 6 April by Strathclyde passenger transport executive. [15858]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Strathclyde passenger transport executive contracts of £75,000 or more are referred automatically to Strathclyde regional council. Any such contracts falling within the conditions laid down by section 55 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 will be subject to the consent procedures involving successor authorities set out there.

Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current salaries of the principals of Scotland's further education colleges; and what they were at the moment of incorporation following the transfer of control from the local authorities. [17071]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on salaries paid to college principals at the time of incorporation on 1 April 1993 is not held centrally; further education college audited accounts for 1993–94 did not require to include information about the salaries of principals. With effect from the 1994–95 financial year, further education college boards of management will be required to indicate in a consistent manner in their annual accounts the total emoluments of principals. The audited accounts, which are public documents, are due to be submitted to the Scottish Office Education Department by 30 September 1995.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a further education funding council. [17072]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce a further education funding council.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra money will be made available to fund grant aid for forestry on land which is to count against a farmer's set-aside obligations. [17077]

Sir Hector Monro: The increased funding announced in the Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–98—Cm 2814—is expected to be sufficient to meet all applications for grant-aid for forestry, including those for land which is to count against a farmer's set-aside obligations.

Child Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the child care or nursery facilities within his Department; and what is the breakdown in their use (a) by grade and (b) by gender. [15237]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 March 1995]: My Department operates an on-site nursery at East Craigs, Edinburgh, which is licensed for 15 full-time equivalent places. A total of 17 staff use the facility—12 female and five male. The grade breakdown is as follows:

Grade equivalent	Number
SEO	1
HEO	2
EO	6
AO	5
AA	1
Total	17

A further 30 to 35 place nursery is due to open at Victoria quay, Edinburgh in autumn 1995. In addition, my staff have access to a holiday play scheme operated by Customs and Excise in Edinburgh.

Borders College

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to (a) receive and (b) act upon the report from the chairman of the board of his inquiry held in January into staff discontent at Borders college. [17410]

Mr. Lang: The board of management of Borders college has carried out a review into matters of concern raised by lecturers' unions and a report has been submitted to the Scottish Office Education Department. Discussions between my officials and the chairman of the board of management and the college principal have taken place. Further investigations are under way. I will write to the right hon. Member when these are completed.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Scottish Homes supplied the names and addresses of its tenants in the north of Glasgow to Gemini Housing Association; and if the names and addresses were drawn from a computer database. [18065]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when and at what charge Scottish Homes supplied Gemini Housing Association with computer printed labels run of names and addresses of Scottish Homes tenants living in the north end of Glasgow; [18220]

(2) in what circumstances Scottish Homes gives computer data information to organisations other than registered housing associations; [18221]

(3) if Scottish Homes stores the names and addresses of its tenants on computer; [18222]

(4) on how many occasions in 1994 Scottish Homes supplied the names and addresses of all the tenants in the north of Glasgow to organisations other than registered housing associations. [18219]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Speech and Language Disorders

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children have been diagnosed as having a specific speech or language disorder as a primary handicap, in each Scottish region and islands area; what number of these children from each region or island area are educated outwith their own region and, of these, how many are educated in England; what schools are attended by children with specific speech or language disorders who are educated within their own region and what is the annual cost per pupil; and of these children, identified with a specific speech or language disorder as a principal handicap, how many are recorded, in each region and islands area. [17877]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. The available information is given in the table.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of Scotland is designated as being environmentally sensitive; how much Government funding is spent annually on environmentally sensitive areas; how this formula is calculated; and if he will make a statement. [17795]

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 April 1995]: There are 10 environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland covering over 1.4 million hectares, about 20 per cent. of the land area. Expenditure in 1993–94 was £0.963 million and planned provision will rise to £9.2 million in 1997–98. Payments are calculated on the basis of estimated average income losses and additional costs resulting from compliance with the scheme requirements and may also take account of the need to provide an incentive. Sufficient resources have been allocated to allow eligible farmers and crofters in the designated areas to participate in the scheme.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for every financial year since 1988–89 and the plans until 1997–98 for (a) the amount of the Scottish Office grant in aid to Scottish Enterprise, (b) the amount raised internally by rental and sale of its property; (c) the total revenue received in grants for the European Community and (d) the total budget. [17699]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is given in the table:

£ million

	Grant-in-aid	Gross provision	Property proceeds (Rental)	Property proceeds (Disposal)	Receipts from European Social Fund for Government training programmes
1991–92	379.3	446.4	7.7	16.5	18.1
1992–93	375.6	449.1	9.0	7.0	22.8
1993–94	378.8	451.4	11.9	15.2	23.3

1997–98 (plans)	n/a	472.7	n/a	n/a	n/a

Scottish Enterprise came into operation on 1 April 1991. Details of its budget after 1995–96 will be addressed in future public expenditure surveys.

Unitary Authorities

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority employees he estimates will be offered three years' protection of salary before being downgraded as a result of being offered lower-paid jobs in the new unitary authorities. [17901]

Mr. Kynoch: We have not made any estimate, as the number will depend on decisions taken by the new councils once they have determined their staffing structures.

European Social Fund

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the future administration of the European social fund in Scotland, and if he will make a statement. [18693]

Mr. Lang: I took the responsibility last year for European social fund expenditure under objectives 1, 2 and 5b for the new programming period which started on 1 January 1994. I have now agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment that I should assume responsibility for the administration of all European social fund expenditure in Scotland.

As regards the Great Britain objective 3 programme, the Scottish Office will be responsible for all relevant projects which commenced from 1 January 1995 onwards. On the same basis, my Department will also be responsible in Scotland for all Community initiatives involving ESF support, including ADAPT and EMPLOYMENT.

To this end, I have agreed with my right hon. Friend that these arrangements should be implemented from 1 April 1995 and the relevant administrative and financial changes are being put in place on that basis.

Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about performance targets for the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency for 1995–96. [18694]

Mr. Lang: For the financial year 1995–96 I have set the following targets:

Aerial surveillance—per cent of hours flown on task: 85%

Aerial surveillance—cost per aircraft sighting: £86

Marine surveillance—number of boardings at sea: 2,800

Marine surveillance—cost per boarding: £2,400

Sea Fisheries Inspectorate—cost per logsheet check: £67

75 per cent. of cases for prosecution to be reported within 6 weeks of offence being detected and 90 per cent. within 8 weeks

Number of cases where court proceeding are taken as percentage of offences reported to prosecuting authorities: 75%

In order to ensure that the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency uses its resources efficiently, I have set it a target to achieve cash-releasing efficiency gains of 2 per cent. over 1995–96.

The chief executive will be directly accountable to me for the achievement of these targets, which will be reported in the agency's annual report.

HEALTH

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the practice of mixed-sex wards will be abandoned by the national health service. [15515]

Mr. Sackville: It is for trusts and health authorities to decide for themselves how to use the resources available to them. However, we have recognised the problem and recently issued a revised and expanded patients charter which gives patients the right to be told, before they go into hospital, whether it is planned to care for them in a ward for men and women. In such cases they will be told how their dignity and privacy will be protected. In all cases they can expect single-sex washing and toilet facilities. If patients prefer to be cared for in single-sex accommodation—either a single-sex ward or a "bay" within a larger ward which offers equal privacy—their wishes will be respected wherever possible.

There may be some cases, particularly emergencies, where a hospital cannot provide single-sex accommodation. This is most likely to arise if a patient needs to be looked after by a specialist nurse in an intensive care ward or in an observation unit. It is also possible that single-sex accommodation may not be available at the time proposed for the patient's admission. If this is the case, the patient can choose between accepting immediate admission or waiting for single-sex accommodation to become available.

There is a difference between a mixed-sex ward, consisting of a number of single-sex bays with four to six patients in them, and a "Nightingale" type ward, which is suitable only for single-sex accommodation. We are phasing out these "Nightingale" wards and no new ones are being commissioned.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was saved by fundholders in each year since 1990 in each regional health authority area; and how much of this money was invested into the general practitioners' premises. [16092]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 24 November 1994 at columns 321–22 and on 14 March at column 545.

Information on how general practitioner fundholders spend savings is available from regional health authorities, which are responsible for managing the fundholding scheme in their area.

Estranged Children

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received about 16 and 17-year-olds who contact social services claiming to be estranged from their parents; [16885]

(2) what representations she has received from parents of 16 and 17-year-olds who claim to social services that they are estranged from their parents; and if she will make a statement; [16884]

(3) what assessment she has made of whether the Children Act 1989 gives parents sufficient rights when 16 and 17-year-olds inform social services departments that they wish to leave home claiming estrangement; [16882]

(4) what rights parents have if a 16 or 17-year-old child seeks assistance from social services claiming estrangement from their parents; [16883]

(5) if she will issue new guidelines to social service departments dealing with 16 and 17-year-olds who claim to be estranged from their parents. [16881]

Mr. Bowis: Over the last 12 months the Department of Health has records of five representations from parents about the estrangement of their 16 or 17-year-old children. The Children Act 1989 requires authorities, so far as reasonably practicable, to ascertain the wishes and feelings of parents. Parents have a right to make representations or complaints and the authority must respond to these. If parents remain dissatisfied they have recourse to the local government ombudsman, who can investigate complaints of local government maladministration. Ultimately, parents could seek judicial review if they consider the authority has failed in its duties. Local authorities are expected to promote or maintain contact between the child and the parents wherever possible and to provide advice and counselling so that families can overcome identified difficulties. Guidance is contained in volume 2 of the "Children Act 1989 Guidance and Regulations". I have no current plans to amend this.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 700, to the hon. Member for Tyne Bridge, if she will initiate inquiries into the practice of consultants refusing, as a direct result of the patients charter, to accept on to their waiting lists patients referred by general practitioners for non-urgent operations on the basis that this would extend the waiting lists beyond Government guidelines of acceptability. [17076]

Mr. Malone: No. Decisions on when patients are treated must be made by the doctors involved in the patient's care and must be based on their assessment of the patient's clinical needs and priority.

Publicity

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by her Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are her latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17633]

Mr. Sackville: The breakdown of expenditure for 1992–93 to 1994–95 is shown in the table.

£ Million

	Financial year
Media	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95 (estimated)
TV	2.773	1.793	1.582
Radio	0.020	0.492	0.951
Newspaper	1.976	2.504	0.904
Other	0.285	1.020	1.024
Recruitment	0.012	0.009	[1]0.137

[1] Includes health service professions recruitment. Budgets for 1995–96 have not yet been agreed.

Expenditure covers a wide range of publicity campaigns relating to legislation, policy, patient's rights and other health advice

Poisons Unit

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by what criteria projects are chosen by the national poisons unit; [18024]

(2) if she will list those projects undertaken by the national poisons unit which are directly linked to grants; [18025]

(3) if she will list by source and value the grant income of the national poisons unit. [18023]

Mr. Sackville: Management of the poisons unit at New Cross, London, is the responsibility of the Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital Trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executive of the trust, Mr. Tim Matthews, for details of projects undertaken at the unit.

In 1994–95, the Department provided £672,000 to the trust in respect of the poisons unit's ongoing contribution to the work of the national poisons information service.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the aims and conclusions of the surveillance of traditional remedies by the national poisons unit; [18026]

(2) what assessment her Department has made of the number of deaths or serious injuries caused by traditional remedies. [18027]

Mr. Sackville: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has funded surveillance by the poisons unit at Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital Trust of possible toxic effects of traditional herbal remedies. These reports have been considered by both the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee. Both committees accepted that clinical evidence gave cause for concern about the safety of some of these products and recommended that further consideration should be given to the action which might be appropriate. Officials in the Department of Health and in the Ministry are taking this forward.

The Medicines Control Agency has a well developed system for monitoring adverse effects of all licensed medicines, including traditional remedies when they are licensed. All safety hazards which arise are promptly investigated and where necessary action is taken to minimise the risks.

Blood Services

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations have been cancelled due to a lack of blood supplies since March 1994. [18016]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who sanctioned the change of logo for the National Blood Authority; and if royal approval was (a) required and (b) sought. [18028]

Mr. Sackville: The national blood service logo was introduced by the National Blood Authority in April 1994 as one part of the authority's identity and communications review.

Official advice was that it was not necessary to seek formal permission to remove the crown from the logo.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the cost (a) per unit and (b) in total of A-positive type blood discarded during (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994; [18020]

(2) what is the cost (a) per unit and (b) in total of AB blood discarded during (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994. [18019]

Mr. Sackville: The average cost of type AB blood and of type A-positive blood is £35 per unit. The information about blood discarded is not available centrally.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to prevent wastage of stocks of AB type blood. [18018]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial assessment has been made of the decision by the National Blood Authority to collect all clinical fresh frozen plasma by apheresis; and what assessment has been made of the surpluses of plasma this will generate. [18017]

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority has made no decisions about collection of fresh frozen plasma for clinical use. The matter is under consideration.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish her Department's report on the contribution of the pharmaceutical industry to the British economy. [17882]

Mr. Malone: The joint Government-industry pharmaceutical industry strategy working group has [illegible] some work on the contribution of the pharmaceutical industry to the United Kingdom economy, and a report is being prepared by the office of health economics, which is part of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to ensure that the nursing profession receive a 3 per cent. pay increase; and if she will make a statement. [17880]

Mr. Malone: The Government accepted the recommendation from the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine that there should be a 1 per cent. increase in national salary rates and local negotiations on pay—including, where appropriate, leads and allowances—and/or conditions. The NPRB's expectation that the outcome of local negotiations plus the 1 per cent. increase in national pay should provide improvements for staff totalling between 1.5 and 3 per cent. is endorsed by the Government.

So far, some 60 trusts have signalled their intended approach to pay for their nursing staff. About 70 per cent. of these are proposing to pay an increase of around 3 per cent. The Government expect this trend to continue.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she will take to ensure the independence from Government influence of the Nurses' Pay Review Body; and if she will make a statement. [17867]

Mr. Malone: The Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine which was set up in 1983 always has been and continues to be an independent body.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to await the conclusion of an enabling agreement by the Nurses and Midwives Negotiating Council before promoting any local pay settlements for nurses; and if she will make a statement. [17866]

Mr. Malone: Trusts already have freedom to negotiate local deals. However, an enabling provision in the national terms and conditions of service will further facilitate local pay bargaining.

Sight Tests

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis she has carried out comparing the costs of reintroducing NHS eye tests for the elderly with the extra medical and social costs of treating advanced eye disease in the same groups of people. [17988]

Mr. Malone: None. Estimates of the total numbers of sight tests performed in Great Britain since universal eligibility for free national health service sight tests was removed in April 1989 are as follows:

	Millions
1989–90	[1][3]10.8
1990–91	[1][3]12.41
1991–92	[2][3]12.8
1992–93	[2][3]14.3
1993–94	[3][4]13.2
1994–95	[3][4][5]12.7

[1] Figures estimated using Federation of Ophthalmic and Dispensing Opticians data.

[2] Figures estimated by FODO.

[3] These estimates may not be comparable because of different sampling methodologies used.

[4] Figures estimated by the joint—Department of Health and profession—Technical Sub-Committee.

[5] There is no statistically significant change in the estimated volume since 1993–94, which indicates that the volume has remained much the same.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken for the early prevention, detection and treatment of eye problems in the population aged over 65 years. [17987]

Mr. Malone: A sight test must by law include a comprehensive eye examination to check for any disease, injury or abnormality which may be present. People aged over 65 are not, as a group, automatically eligible for free national health service sight tests, but provision has been made for people especially at risk from eye disease and those in receipt of income support, family credit and disability working allowance to continue to be entitled to them.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer 28 March, Official Report, column 563, when she intends to publish clinical outcome indicators for NHS trusts in England similar to those published by the Secretary of State for Scotland in December 1994. [17961]

Mr. Sackville: The clinical outcome indicators for national health service trusts which were published in Scotland were based on linked patient records. Such linkage is not yet available in England and there are therefore no plans at present to publish such indicators. The programme of developing new outcome indicators is longer term and until the work progresses it will not be possible to give publication dates.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Burden : To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the policy of her Department regarding compensation for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through contaminated blood concentrates. [18039]

Mr. Sackville: The Government have no plans to make payments to haemophilia patients who have been infected with hepatitis C through blood products.

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 145, when she expects the ad hoc working party of experts to produce guidance on procedures for the look-back exercise for identifying those at risk of hepatitis C. [18581]

Mr. Sackville: The guidance, including counselling guidelines and treatment options, is being issued to the national health service under cover of a letter from the Chief Medical Officer. Copies will be placed in the Library.

This phase of the exercise is to trace, counsel and, where appropriate, treat those identified as being at risk. It will primarily concern hospital consultants in a number of specialties, those working in blood transfusion centres, and general practitioners. We shall do all that we can by way of counselling and, where appropriate, treatment to care for those who may have been infected.

NHS Low Income Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people get full charge remission under the NHS low income scheme. [18232]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available. In 1994–95, 694,135 claims to the national health service low income scheme resulted in entitlement to full charge remission for the claimant and his dependants. In addition, receipt of income support, family credit and, from 1 April 1995, disability working allowance—and capital was £8,000 or less when this benefit was claimed—provides automatic entitlement to full charge remission under the low income scheme.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times in each year since 1979–80 her Department has written to an hon. or right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question. [18520]

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many parliamentary questions to her Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18518]

(2) how many times in each year since 1979–80 her Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18519]

(3) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by her Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18517]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Patient Complaints Procedure

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recourse is open to a patient who is aggrieved after the responsible medical officer for complaints has agreed to provide an independent professional review; and if she will make a statement. [18231]

Mr. Malone: The independent professional review is carried out by two consultants independent of the hospital involved and the result of their report is final in issues concerning clinical judgement, unless new evidence is brought to light in which case it is for the regional director of public health—or the medical officer for complaints in Wales—to consider what action to take which may include reconvening the IPR. Once the IPR process has reported, the chief executive of the hospital will write to the complainant.

If the complainant remains dissatisfied then he or she may refer their case to the Health Service Commissioner. However, the HSC may only investigate the process of the handling of the complaint. Under the present system complaints about clinical judgement are outside his jurisdiction. The complainant can also consider approaching the appropriate professional representative body, the General Medical Council, and/or taking legal advice.

The Department of Health recently published in the document "Acting on Complaints", copies of which have been placed in the Library, proposals for a simpler, speedier and more effective complaints procedure which will cover complaints about clinical judgement. The Government will introduce legislation as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows, to extend the jurisdiction of the HSC to cover all national health service complaints including complaints about the exercise of clinical judgement. These plans will be developed in more detail in consultation with the NHS, professional representative bodies and other interested parties in the coming months. The new NHS complaints procedure will be implemented from April 1996.

Access to Information

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to increase access to information about the national health service. [18762]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall be publishing a code of practice on openness in the national health service on Wednesday 5 April. This fulfils the Government's commitment in the White Paper on Open Government, published in 1993, to increase public access to information about the NHS. This code is the first of its kind in the NHS and, following the codes of conduct and accountability which I published last year, represents a further step towards making the NHS more responsive and accountable to the public it serves. It builds on the success of the patients charter and performance league tables in increasing and improving the information available to members of the public about the NHS.

The governing principle of this code of practice on openness is that the NHS should respond positively to requests for information. The code sets out clearly for the public what information is available and from whom. It explains how to complain about a refusal to provide information, including referral of such a complaint to the Health Service Commissioner. It also describes good practice in publishing information and in responding to requests for information which is not routinely published. One of the key aims of the code of practice on openness is to foster mutual trust and confidence between the public and the NHS.

The code of practice is to be implemented by all NHS trusts and authorities on 1 June 1995. My Department will be issuing detailed guidance to assist NHS organisations in the operation of the code.

Copies of the code will be placed in the Library.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the report by the Government Actuary on his valuation of the national health service superannuation scheme in England and Wales 1984 to 1989. [18763]

Mr. Malone: I have today placed copies of the report in the Library.

The report concludes that the rate of contribution required from employers to meet the scheme's future liabilities, after taking account of employees' contributions, should remain at 4 per cent. The scheme's liabilities do not include the cost of pensions increase, most of which is currently met by the Exchequer.

I have decided to accept the Government Actuary's recommendation.

Waiting Lists, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the waiting list for elective surgery at each London district health authority; and what are the available beds in each London district health authority. [18290]

Mr. Malone: Information on waiting lists and times at each national health service trust and district health authority is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", published twice yearly. Copies are available in the Library.

The latest information on the average daily number of available beds is for NHS trusts and directly managed units and is published in "Bed availability for England: Financial Year 1993–94", copies of which are also available in the Library.

Health Service Development, London

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how it is proposed to develop London's health services following the recent public consultations conducted by health authorities in north and south London. [18858]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today written to the chairmen of the North and South Thames regional health authorities advising them of my decisions on a number of proposals from health authorities to develop local services. These proposals have all been subject to extensive public consultation and I have given most careful consideration to the comments made. Copies of my letters to the regional chairmen will be placed in the Library.

Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham

I have decided to accept the proposals for the concentration of acute services provided by the Guy's and St. Thomas' NHS Trust by developing St. Thomas' as the main site for acute in-patient and emergency services, and developing Guy's as a hospital for local people providing a range of services including a minor injuries unit, out-patient clinics, day surgery facilities and in-patient beds for planned, non-emergency treatment for people on waiting lists. Guy's would also retain the dental hospital and school, and would provide mental health services including in-patient beds. I have made it clear that the Guy's accident and emergency department and supporting beds are not to close until alternative facilities are in place and operating satisfactorily, which I understand will not be before the end of 1998.

I have also decided to accept the proposal to transfer kidney transplant operations from King's College hospital, Dulwich to the Guy's and St. Thomas' NHS Trust.

Bexley and Greenwich

I have decided to accept the proposals to develop the Queen Elizabeth military hospital as the main new NHS district general hospital for the Greenwich area by transferring acute services from Greenwich district hospital and the Brook hospital to QEMH. This will lead to the closure of the Brook hospital and change of use of the Greenwich district hospital. I have also decided to agree to the transfer of specialist neurosurgery and cardiothoracic services from the Brook hospital to King's and Guy's and St. Thomas', respectively.

East London and The City

I have decided to accept the proposals to improve the general and specialist services managed by the Royal Hospitals NHS Trust by bringing them together on the Royal London Whitechapel site. This will mean, over time, transferring services from the London chest hospital site and most of the St. Bartholomew's site.

I am determined that the St. Bartholomew's ethos and culture should be preserved, albeit on a different site. In making my decision, I have paid particular attention to the views which have been expressed about the historical significance of St. Bartholomew's and its national and international importance as a centre of excellence in medical teaching and research. I am setting up a project team to explore the options for using the invaluable asset of the Smithfield site. This will build on the work carried out by the trust and the "City Initiative".

I also welcome the proposals to develop the Homerton hospital as a modern district general hospital for the growing population of Hackney.

Barnet

I have decided to accept the proposals to develop the Edgware site as a new local hospital. The Edgware accident and emergency department will be replaced by a minor injuries unit, and in-patient services transferred from Edgware general hospital to Barnet General, following completion of its redevelopment, Northwick Park and the Royal Free hospitals. I have made it clear that the Edgware accident and emergency department is to remain open until phase 1a of the development at the Barnet general hospital, which includes a new accident and emergency department, has been completed, which I understand is not expected to be before 1997, and satisfactory arrangements are in place for ambulance transport and for patient and visitor transport between the two sites.

The changes which I have agreed will strengthen specialist services by concentrating them in fewer, better, centres of excellence and provide modern acute hospitals closer to major centres of population. Together with major planned investment in primary and community health services, they will take forward our aim of improving health care for Londoners.

Exhaust Fumes (Leukaemia)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of whether exposure to benzene from motor exhaust fumes is a causative factor in leukaemia and lymphoma; and if she will make a statement. [17701]

Mr. Sackville: Benzene is known to have both carcinogenic and toxic effects, and studies of workers exposed to high concentrations of benzene—up to 100 parts per million—throughout their working life have demonstrated increased risks of leukaemia. Because benzene is a genotoxic carcinogen, no absolutely safe level of exposure can be defined. However, no adverse effect on blood formation has been confirmed in humans following regular repeated exposure to benzene in air at concentrations below 25–30 ppm.

The Department is advised on the health effects of benzene by the Committee on Carcinogenicity and the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants. Their views were taken into account by the joint Department of the Environment/Department of Health expert panel on air quality standards when it recommended a United Kingdom air quality standard for benzene of 5ppb as a running annual average. The urban annual average concentrations is generally at or below 5ppb; at these concentrations there is only an exceedingly small risk to health. The overall effect of policies now in place or agreed means that by the year 2000 exceedances of 5ppb standard should be virtually eliminated.

Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus occurred in Britain in each year since 1990 and in each month since January 1994. [17770]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally in England. Details relating to Wales and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland.

Foster Placements

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals she is considering to alter the Foster Placement (Children) Regulations 1991 with respect to the duties of local authorities and the delegation of those duties to profit-making independent fostering agencies; [17553]

(2) what consultations she has undertaken or plans to undertake about any proposed changes in the Foster Placement Regulations 1991. [17554]

Mr. Bowis: The Government propose to amend the Foster Placement (Children) Regulations 1991 to allow local authorities to delegate to profit-making bodies, certain of their fostering duties.

In August 1994 the Department of Health advised authorities, through circular LAC(94)20, copies of which are available in the Library, of an intention to amend these regulations in this way. I shall shortly be consulting on the draft regulations and associated guidance.

Lynfield Mount Hospital

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what disciplinary action has been taken following the internal and external inquiries into the circumstances in which Raymond Pemberton escaped from the secure unit at Lynfield Mount hospital in Bradford; and if she will make a statement. [18156]

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for Bradford Community Health National Health Service Trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the trust for details.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in her Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18326]

Mr. Sackville: The numbers of staff in post in the Department's agencies for the period 1 April 1993 to 1 February 1995—the latest date for which information is held—and the numbers of posts in agencies which have been contractorised in the last two years, are shown in the tables.

Agency staff in post[1]

	1 April 1993	1 April 1994	1 February 1995
Medicines Control Agency	327	379	372
National Health Service Estates	98	99	109
National Health Service Pensions Agency	531	530	498.6
Medical Devices Agency	—	[2]160.5	158

[1] Vacancies and unfilled posts not included.

[2] The Medical Devices Agency was established on 27 September 1994. Staff in post figures are given for that date.

Contractorised posts

	1993–94	1994–95
Medicines Control Agency	2	—
National Health Service Estates	23	—
National Health Service Pensions Agency	—	16.4

Royal Northern Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations or considerations were received either by her Department or the regional health authority concerning the future of the Royal Northern hospital in Islington. [18417]

Mr. Malone: The future of the Royal Northern hospital is a matter for the North Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Stavely, chairman of the authority, for information concerning the representations the authority has received. The Department of Health has received few expressions of interest in the future of the hospital.

Accident and Emergency Services, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the accident and emergency departments of (a) the Royal Free hospital, (b) University College hospital, (c) Whittingdon hospital, (d) the Royal London hospital, (e) Homerton hospital, (f) North Middlesex and (g) Chase Farm will remain open permanently. [18310]

Mr. Sackville: The provision of accident and emergency services is the responsibility of local health authorities, and is determined in the light of local needs, priorities and resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact New River health authority for details of any plans concerning North Middlesex and Chase Farm hospitals; Camden and Islington health authority about the Royal Free, Whittington and University College hospitals; and East London and The City health authority about Homerton and the Royal London hospitals.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the operating capacity and operating level of each of London's accident and emergency units; and if she will make a statement. [18289]

Mr. Sackville: It is for local health authorities to determine the extent of their needs for accident and emergency services, and to ensure that these are met.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration her Department has given to the effect that the closure of London hospitals will have on the time that emergency ambulances will take to reach a suitable hospital. [18269]

Mr. Malone: When proposing major service changes, local heath authorites take into account the effect on ambulance journey times to ensure that arrangements will be adequate.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase or decrease in the number of dentists between 1985 and 1995 in the areas of (a) Kent, (b) Surrey, (c) Bedfordshire and (d) Buckinghamshire. [18273]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

General Dental Service: numbers of dentists[1,2] in Kent, Surrey, Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire family health services authorities at 30 September 1995 and 30 September 1994.

FHSA	1985	1994	Increase
Kent	458	540	82
Surrey	431	443	12
Bedfordshire	128	149	21
Buckinghamshire	189	240	51

Dental Practice Board.

Notes:

[1] Includes principals, assistants and vocational trainees. Excludes hospital, community and salaried dentists.

[2] Some dentists have contracts with more than one family health services authority. These dentists have been counted only once, in the family health services authority in which they hold their main contracts.

Contagious Diseases (Health Workers)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses and how many doctors have died from contagious diseases originating at their work place in each of the last 15 years; what information is given to nursing and other staff of the risks of disease from specific patients; and if she will make a statement. [16946]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The information requested from the national health service industrial injuries scheme records would require extensive manual investigations and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information from other sources is as shown.

Employers are required by the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 to report specified diseases suffered by a person currently at work where the work involves an activity mentioned in the schedule. There is no requirement to report deaths resulting from these diseases. The specified diseases relevant to health care workers most likely to be fatal are hepatitis, tuberculosis and illnesses caused by a pathogen which presents a hazard to human health. The latter would include HIV. The table gives details of reports received since April 1986 where the occupation was given as nurse or doctor. Not all of these will have been occupationally acquired.

Year	Hepatitis	Tuberculosis	Pathogen	Total
1986–87	11	6	4	21
1987–88	9	3	—	12
1988–89	7	1	—	8
1989–90	8	2	—	10
1990–91	5	3	2	10
1991–92	4	5	12	21
1993–94	—	2	2	4

The Public Health Laboratory Service keep records of how HIV infection and hepatitis B were probably acquired. No deaths from AIDS are known to have occurred in health care workers who acquired HIV infection occupationally. No fatal cases of acute hepatitis B are known to have occurred in a health care worker infected at work in the United Kingdom during the past 10 years.

The number of deaths from tuberculosis in health care workers infected at work is not known. However, a survey in 1988 revealed fewer than 50 health care workers with tuberculosis and the majority of those will not have acquired the disease through their work. Based on the known fatality rate for TB in this age group, only one or two of these cases will be expected to have died.

In 1990 The Department of Health issued a booklet "Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers—Protection Against Infection With HIV and Hepatitis Viruses". Advice is also contained in guidelines by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens; "HIV—the Causative agent of AIDS" also issued in 1990. Advice on protection of health workers was given in the British Thoracic Society guidelines in 1994. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Food labelling (Peanut Products)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to introduce food safety regulations to enforce the indication of peanut extract contents on food labelling. [17014]

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

The European Community's scientific committee for food is currently considering recommendations concerning which allergens occurring in food have sufficiently serious consequences for consumer health to justify their always being listed on a food label. We expect the EC Commission to make proposals for revised rules following receipt of the scientific opinion and we expect that peanuts will be included.

In the meantime, my officials have held discussions with industry and consumer representatives and have established awareness of the problem across all sectors of the industry. As a result, many food manufacturers are now labelling their products voluntarily and some have examined the reformulation of products. We have also sponsored research to determine whether and how far groundnut oils may be contributing to the problems.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in England the total number of homeless households accepted for each local authority in each year between 1979 and 1994. [17045]

Mr. Curry: I have today placed in the Library a table giving the numbers of homeless households which each local authority in England reported as having accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation, under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985 in the years 1979 to 1994.

Council House Sales

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of council homes sold (a) under the right to buy, and (b) otherwise, by each local authority in England in each year from 1980 to 1994. [17044]

Mr. Curry: Tables showing the available information on total right-to-buy sales for each English local authority for every financial year from 1979–80 to March 1994 are in the Library. In addition, the tables also give data on total sales and on the number of flats sold.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which are considered to be debt free; and what are the Government guidelines on the debt to equity ratio for local authorities. [17372]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: A local authority is debt free if it has a nil or negative credit ceiling at the beginning of the current financial year and has no outstanding borrowing, other than short-term borrowing repayable within not more than 12 months or borrowing under the City of London (Various Powers) Act 1924. The following local authorities declared themselves to be debt free as at 30 September 1994:

Dorset
Bedford
Bracknell
Breckland
Broadland
Chiltern
Christchurch
Corby
Dacorum
Daventry
East Cambridgeshire
East Devon
East Dorset
Epsom and Ewell
Hambleton
Hertsmere
Leominster
Medina
Mid Bedfordshire
Mid Sussex
Newbury
Rochester upon Medway
Ryedale
St. Edmundsbury
South Bucks
South Northampton
South Shropshire
South Wight
South Coastal Surrey Heath
Swale
Tonbridge and Malling
Tunbridge Wells
West Sussex
Barking and Dagenham
City of London

There is no real equivalent to shareholders' equity in local authorities, and therefore no guidelines on the ratio of debt to equity. But the local government capital finance system effectively regulates authorities' new borrowing and requires provision to be made for debt redemption. We will continue to encourage local authorities to reduce their outstanding debt using sums which they have set aside for this purpose.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reduce the rate support grant to local authorities. [18236]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Revenue support grant funds the difference between local authorities' standard spending assessments and what they can expect to receive from council taxes, non-domestic rates and from other grants. The relative levels of these components are considered annually by the Government as part of the public expenditure round.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce his capping principles for 1995–96 and the list of authorities which he intends to cap.

Mr. Gummer: My capping principles for 1995–96 are as follows:

(i) for police authorities:

any increase of more than 2.5 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over SSA;

any increase of more than 1.5 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over 5 per cent. above SSA;

any increase of more than 0.5 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over 10 per cent. above SSA;

(ii) for inner London boroughs and the metropolitan county fire and civil defence authorities:

any increase of more than 2 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over SSA;

any increase of more than 1.25 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over 5 per cent. above SSA;

any increase of more than 0.5 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over 10 per cent. above SSA;

(iii) for all other authorities:

any increase of more than 0.5 per cent. over the 1994–95 base budget is an excessive increase if it gives rise to a 1995–96 budget requirement over SSA;

(iv) for all authorities:

any 1995–96 budget requirement more than 12.5 per cent. above SSA is excessive save that an authority will not be designated if:

(a) its 1994–95 SSA was reduced by 10 per cent. or more purely as a result of the 1993 SSA review and its 1995–96 budget requirement is a cash freeze or reduction on its 1994–95 base budget;

(b) its 1995–96 budget requirement is 30 per cent. or less above SSA and is a cash freeze or reduction on its 1994–95 base budget;

(c) its 1995–96 budget requirement is 60 per cent. or less above SSA and is at least 5 per cent. below its 1994–95 base budget;

(d) its 1995–96 budget requirement is at least 10 per cent. below its 1994–95 base budget.

with the general proviso that:

no authority is to be designated if its budget requirement is £10,000 or less above the limit implied by these principles.

In accordance with sections 54 and 56 of the Local Government Act 1992, I have decided to designate the authorities listed. The amount given in brackets after each authority is the amount which I am proposing should be the maximum amount calculated by each authority as its budget requirement for 1995–96—in the case of billing authorities, the amount is gross of local precepts:

Devon county council—£592.046 million
Gloucestershire county council—£300.714 million
Shropshire county council—£239.364 million
Somerset county council—£262.321 million
Sheffield city council—£392.763 million
Newcastle upon Tyne city council—£233.991 million
Barnsley metropolitan borough council—£150.626 million
Norwich city council—£16.378 million
Lincolnshire police authority—£58.577 million
South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority—£32.934 million

I have placed in the Library of the House a table which gives further details.

Authorities which have been designated for council tax capping now have a period of 28 days, starting today, in which to inform us whether or not they accept their proposed cap. It they accept, the cap is confirmed by notice and the authority can set a revised lower budget and lower council tax bills forthwith. The exception is South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority which has been designated at the budget it originally set and therefore does not have to reduce its budget nor incur rebilling costs. If an authority challenges, it must propose an alternative together with its reasons for doing so. At this stage, authorities have the opportunity to meet us to explain that case. Once we have considered all the available information, we shall propose final caps which will be included in an order, a draft of which is debated by the House of Commons. If the draft order is approved, final caps are set by notice and revised budgets and council tax levels must then be set by the authorities concerned.

Gloucestershire County Council

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Gloucestershire county council's total debt for the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the figures for each of the previous 10 years. [17373]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows:

Outstanding debt at end of year[1]

Year	£ million
1983–84	23.9
1984–85	23.8
1985–86	45.9
1986–87	53.4
1987–88	66.8
1988–89	92.4
1989–90	104.4
1990–91	121.1
1991–92	124.5
1992–93	129.9
1993–94	136.3

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Internet electronic addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information superhighway. [17738]

Sir Paul Beresford: DOE is currently evaluating the Internet for electronic communications and has not established formal e-mail addresses for the Department centrally or Ministers individually. A fully advanced office support system project is, however, now under way and will, among other things, provide full electronic mail links across all areas of the Department and the ability to communicate via external networks, during the next three years.

Officials have been asked to investigate the feasibility of publishing a range of departmental information through the Internet. No firm decision has yet been taken by the Department to use this service.

Construction Industry

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer from the Chancellor of the Exchequer of 27 March, Official Report, column 432, what is his Department's view on whether value for money in public procurement and the efficient contribution of the construction industry to the economy is best served by a single exclusive register for public sector work. [17726]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Sir Michael Latham, in his review "Constructing the Team", recommended that there should be single lists of contractors and consultants seeking public sector work. He further recommended that these be based upon the contractor management information systems and the consultants register, databases managed by the Department of the Environment. Two working groups acting under the auspices of the Construction Industry Board are considering Sir Michael's recommendations. One is considering consultants, the other contractors. Both working groups are due to report later this year. In tandem with the two working groups, the Department of the Environment has set in hand a consultancy project with Capita Management Consultancy Ltd., which is considering, among other things, the costs and benefits which would accrue to both the public and private sector, in having a single list for contractors and consultants for public sector work. The consultants are due to report at the end of April this year.

Local Authorities (Overtime)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on total overtime payments made by local authorities; and if he will list the total amount paid by each local authority in the most recent year the information is available. [18063]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Research Projects

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 229, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), if he will list for the remaining regional government offices the research projects contracted for, the titles of the projects, their estimated cost and to which company or organisation they have been awarded. [17492]

Motor Exhaust Pollution

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of the addition of involatile ethers on motor exhaust pollution. [17769]

Mr. Atkins: The environmental case for the addition of involatile ethers such as MTBE, ETBE or TAME to petrol as oxygenating agents in not yet clear. The Government will continue to keep their use under review, and will be participating fully in the setting of standards for vehicle emissions and fuel formulation at a European level, in particular in the light of the forthcoming report from the European tripartite initiative on future engine and fuel technologies.

Walton Bridge

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call in the planning application by Surrey county council to replace Walton bridge. [17775]

Sir Paul Beresford: We are considering representations that the application should be called in for decision by my right hon. Friend. I shall write to the hon. Member when the decision on call-in has been made.

North Sea

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the progress being made to fulfil United Kingdom commitments to a 50 per cent. reduction in pollution levels of pesticides and heavy metals going into the North sea. [17476]

Mr. Atkins: A comprehensive progress report on the implementation of all the commitments made at the third international conference on the protection of the North sea, including that to achieve significant reductions—of 50 per cent. or more—of inputs to the North sea of certain listed hazardous substances, is being prepared jointly by the North sea states, and will be published for the fourth North sea conference in June. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Allowing for the difficulties of assessment and comparison, this report will show that the United Kingdom has reduced, by about 50 per cent. or more, inputs of 12 of the 16 pesticides, and seven of the eight heavy metals, in the list. Other reductions have also been achieved.

Waste Management

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the guidance on the regulations for the dismantling and metals recycling industry forthwith, and extend the date for registration for exemption from waste management licensing until 1 May 1995. [18428]

Mr. Atkins: Exemptions from waste management licensing for the recovery of scrap metal are provided in the Waste Management licensing (Amendment etc.) Regulations 1995 which came into force on 1 April 1995. The effect of regulations 3(7) and (8) is to provide a six-month transitional period, to 1 October 1995, during which businesses may register exemptions. We have provided guidance on the regulations in DOE circular 6/95. Copies of the circular have been placed in the Library of the House.

Water Charges

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the basis of charging for water in England and Wales after March 2000 when the use of rateable value will no longer be possible. [18809]

Mr. Gummer: It is for water companies to decide the basis on which they should calculate the bills of individual customers, although the Director General of Water Services has powers to prevent preferential and discriminatory charging of individuals and classes of customer. Companies may not, however, use rateable values after 31 March 2000, and there are limitations on access to information about the council tax banding of individual properties.

The Government believe that metering is in the long term the best basis for paying for water in many circumstances. It is fair and equitable in that it relates charges directly to the amount of water used. It gives customers some control over their bills. Payment by amount used encourages customers to use only water they need and in dry areas it is important that we should develop patterns of water use that are sustainable in the longer term. The Government therefore believe that companies should extend the availability of meters as far as is reasonable. Compulsory transfer to meters for existing domestic customers in existing premises should not generally be necessary.

For practical reasons, wide extension of the use of meters will take considerable time to achieve. Meanwhile, companies will need an alternative basis of charging for many properties. The Secretary of State for Wales and I have considered the representations we have received from the water industry that information about council valuation bands would be a suitable basis for charging for water. We have looked carefully at the evidence which has been put forward. We have concluded that a change to a system based on council tax banding would not be satisfactory. Such a charging system would not necessarily be more equitable than any other unmeasured basis and its introduction would give rise to widespread and arbitrary changes in bills, including the possibility of substantial increases in charges for many of those least able to pay. Further changes would also have to follow as customers moved to charging by metered consumption. We do not therefore intend to allow access to this information.

Companies will, however, need an alternative to metering as the basis of charging after 31 March 2000. The Secretary of State for Wales and I have therefore decided that the best course would be to allow the use of rateable values after that date. The necessary changes to the legislation will be made in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food and Drink Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the United Kingdom food and drink deficit or surplus (a) in total and (b) with other countries of the EU for each year from 1990 to 1994. [14929]

Mr. Jack [Pursuant to his reply, 22 March 1995, co. 232.]: Imports and exports of food, feed and drink as recorded in the overseas trade statistics in the years 1990 to 1994 are shown in £ million in the table:

£ million

	1990	1991	1992	1993 provisional	January-September 1994 provisional
Total:
Imports	12,298	12,262	13,406	13,841	10,868
Exports	6,352	6,827	7,521	8,053	6,435
Crude trade gap	5,946	5,435	5,886	5,789	4,433
EU:
Imports	8,030	8,019	8,862	8,381	6,510
Exports	3,632	4,293	4,736	4,730	3,885
Crude trade gap	4,398	3,726	4,127	3,651	2,625

Note:
Because of differences in valuation principles, the crude trade gap overstates the contribution of food, feed and drink to the deficit on visible trade in the balance of payment statistics by about 15 per cent.

Live Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether calves kept in lorries while waiting for loading on to an aeroplane can be adequately watered. [16979]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 3 April 1995]: It is possible, depending on the circumstances, for calves to be satisfactorily fed with liquid feed while on a lorry. The circumstances have not to date arisen where this has been necessary while waiting for loading on to an aeroplane.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of calves being exported by aeroplanes from Coventry airport; how many calves have departed from Coventry airport in each month since September 1994; and how many calf fatalities there were in each month which occured (i) during loading; (ii) on board the aircraft and (iii) during unloading. [16973]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Information about flights from Coventry with calves is as follows:

	1994			1995
	October	November	December	January	February	March (to 29th)
Flights	None	33	71	3	31	51
Calves	None	6,296	13,535	291	3,102	4,946

No calf fatalities have been reported during loading or unloading, or while the calves were on board the aircraft.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there is a Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food veterinary surgeon present at all loadings of calves on to aeroplanes art Coventry airport. [16975]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 3 April 1995]: All loading of calves on to planes at Coventry airport are supervised by an inspector or a veterinary inspector from the Ministry.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the legal opinion published on 30 March by the RSPCA and the International Fund for Animal Welfare, which argues that the Government could lawfully prohibit the export of veal calves for rearing in veal crates. [18769]

Mr. Waldegrave: The legal opinion published by the RSPCA and IFAW on 30 March is a complex document which merits thorough examination. I shall consider it carefully alongside the other legal advice I have received.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people will be transferred from local authorities to the Meat Hygiene Service; and what is the total estimated cost of this operation. [17017]

Mrs. Browning: A total of 753 staff are expected to transfer to the Meat Hygiene Service from local authorities. External consultants were employed to carry out this exercise which has been completed at a cost of £85,000.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the difference in charges for meat inspection per hour between each local authority and the Meat Hygiene Service. [17618]

Mrs. Browning: A comparison between existing local authorities authority charges for meat inspection and the proposed standard charges by the Meat Hygiene Service was given in the cost compliance assessment which was tabled with the Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Examinations for Residues) (Charges) Regulations 1995.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) on 29 March, Official Report, columns 653–54.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many people will be employed by the Meat Hygiene Service; and what will be their total annual salary; [17016]

(2) what will be the number of senior management staff within the Meat Hygiene Service; and what is their estimated total annual salary. [17024]

Mrs. Browning: The Meat Hygiene Service expects to employ 947 staff at an estimated total annual salary for 1995–96 of £26.5 million. It will employ 11 senior managers at an estimated total annual salary of £476,000.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the total number of Meat Hygiene Service (a) official veterinary surgeons and (b) Meat Hygiene Inspectors; and what will be their estimated salaries. [17219]

Mrs. Browning: The Meat Hygiene Service expects to employ 47 official veterinary surgeons and 835 meat hygiene inspectors. In addition, veterinary services and relief cover for meat inspection will be obtained through contract. I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 3 April to hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Dr. Strang) in respect of MHS salaries.

Abattoirs

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Minister has to monitor the capacity of abattoirs in the United Kingdom. [17019]

Mrs. Browning: The Department has no plans to collect this information centrally. Information on the capacity of British abattoirs is contained in the Meat and Livestock Commission's annual publication entitled "The Abattoir Industry in Great Britain", available from the MLC, ISBN 0904650.33.2.

Intergovernmental Panel on the Oceans

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the letter from the Prime Minister to hon. Member for Linlithgow of 9 March, what progress has been made on the establishment of an intergovernmental panel on the oceans. [17199]

Mr. Jack: The Government share concerns about the depletion of fish stocks and the wider problems of the marine environment. We are reviewing the adequacy of existing mechanisms for fisheries management and will be taking soundings internationally about the possible value of a new initiative such as the establishment of an intergovernmental panel on the oceans.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information superhighway. [17740]

Mr. Jack: As a result of its participation in the CCTA Government information service pilot project, MAFF is aware of the potential offered by electronic networks such as the Internet for the rapid and cost-effective dissemination of public information, and some of the wider opportunities that might be available to the Department through access to Internet services such as the world wide web. The Department is reviewing the options for developing the use of these services further by expanding the range of information on MAFF services, activities and publications accessible to Internet users, and for providing direct access to Internet services for MAFF staff. This work will include looking into the provision of a dedicated MAFF service on the Internet, together with full consideration of the security issues.

We shall also be considering how e-mail access to all parts of the Department, including Ministers' offices, can be increased. The current structure of the Internet electronic mail address for MAFF divisions is:

a.n.other@div.maff.gov.uk

At present, the gateway for public inquirers using e-mail is through the MAFF helpline service on:

helpline@inf.maff.gov.uk

Sheep Dips

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the development and use of non-organophosphorous sheep dips. [17392]

Mrs Browning: Flumethrin-based non-organophosphorous sheep dips are already authorised for use in the United Kingdom. Decisions on whether to use these products is the responsibility of the individual sheep farmer in the light of their particular circumstances, including the alternatives available and the health status of their flock. The development and marketing of non-organophosphorous dips is a matter for the commercial judgment of the manufacturers concerned. The Veterinary Medicines Directorate will do all it can to complete the assessment of any applications for marketing authorisations for such products as quickly as possible.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the assessment of the proposals submitted for epidemiological research into the effects of organophosphorous sheep dips; and if he will make a statement. [18770]

Mrs. Browning: Thirteen proposals were received in response to the advertisements placed at the end of 1994 following acceptance by the Government of the recommendation of the medical and scientific panel of the veterinary products committee for carefully designed and targeted epidemiological studies into the effects of OP sheep dips. This research is to be publicly funded. Assessment of the proposals has now been completed, and after detailed consideration it has been concluded that none meets the specifications laid down in the original advertisement. Considerable changes would need to be made before any of them could do so and, in the circumstances, it has been decided to re-advertise so that new or revised proposals can be submitted. This will be done as quickly as possible, but it is now likely to be the end of July before any contracts can be awarded.

I very much regret this further delay in getting this important work under way, but it is clearly in the interests of all concerned to ensure that any research which is commissioned is both scientifically sound and addresses the issues of concern.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will indicate in respect of the members of the review of the common fisheries policy (a) their position for or against the common fisheries policy and (b) the Government or European posts or grants which they have or have had in the past; [17964]

(2) what consultations he has had with (a) the Scottish White Fish Producers, (b) the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and (c) Save Britain's Fish before appointing the members of his review body on the common fisheries policy; of if he will accept nominations from these bodies for members; [17896]

(3) what consideration was given to including in the review group of the common fisheries policy individuals critical of the common fisheries policy. [17963]

Mr. Jack: The members of the group set up to review the common fisheries policy were appointed because of the particular personal expertise in fisheries and related matters which they could bring to the group's discussions. I shall want the group to take an open-minded look at possible improvements to the CFP and, if it decides that it would help its work to hear from specific organisations or individuals, that could be arranged. I did not consider it would be helpful to have members representing particular interest groups.

Banner Report

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to respond to the recommendation in the Banner report on the ethical implications of emerging technologies in the breeding of farm animals to establish an advisory standing committee on the broad ethical questions involved in this field. [18076]

Mrs. Browning: The Government are considering with the Farm Animal Welfare Council and the animal procedures committee whether an additional source of advice on ethical issues is needed or whether the existing committees could fulfil this role. These bodies are expected to consider the issue later in the year.

Grant Misuse

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what has been the total cost to his Department of preparing and bringing charges against farmers in Devon and Cornwall for allegedly misusing departmental grants for hedging and ditching; against how many farmers his Department has prepared cases; how many have been charged; and what has been the outcome of any court cases so far; [18005]

(2) if it is his Department's intention to continue to pursue charges against farmers in Devon and Cornwall for allegedly misusing hedging and ditching grants; and if he will make a statement. [18006]

Mrs. Browning: This Department has been conducting investigations into a large number of grant applications in Devon and Cornwall.As a result of these investigations, so far, 19 people have been summoned and subsequently committed to the Crown court for trial. One case has been heard, at the end of February, and this resulted in an acquittal of the defendant. Three further cases are likely to be listed for trial in May. All the cases are kept under constant review in accordance with the code for Crown prosecutors. Further reports are under consideration and at this stage I am unable to comment further.

It is not possible to calculate the total cost to the Department of preparing and bringing charges before the court without disproportionate cost being incurred.

Crop Fees

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of the Seeds (National List of Varieties) (Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (SI 1995 No. 607); what is the highest percentage increase in fees on crops; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the introduction of a fee for a winter oilseed rape variety. [18396]

Mr. Jack: These regulations implement the final stage of a review of the statutory plant variety trialling system, which reduced the overall number of trial sites and hence the overall costs. The industry was fully consulted and agreed the proposals. Part of this agreement included the reintroduction of statutory trial fees over two years from 1 April 1994. The cost to the industry of such fees is more than offset by the savings arising from the reduced trialling system and the transfer of disease testing costs to Government. The net effect of these arrangements was to reduce the overall costs to the industry by about 10 per cent.

Since the industry agreed to the above arrangements in advance, I foresee no adverse effect from the introduction of statutory trial fees for winter oilseed rape varieties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Press Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press officers there are in his Department currently; and what the figure was in 1979. [16573]

Sir John Wheeler: There are currently 29 press officers working in the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office compared with 26 in 1979.

Part-time Study

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to reduce the number of hours permitted for a person on benefit to attend courses at colleges of further education without losing benefit; and if they have examined the impact of these plans on (a) the participation in vocational education courses by the long-term unemployed and (b) the future of further education establishments particularly those developed specifically to tackle the shortage of skills in areas of high unemployment. [17069]

Mr. Moss: The Government have announced proposals to update the rules for part-time study while claiming unemployment benefits when jobseeker's allowance is introduced in April 1996.

As now, people claiming unemployment benefits will be able to study part-time provided they remain available for and are actively seeking employment. Courses funded by the Further Education Funding Council in England are, however, no longer classed as either full or part-time. They are defined in terms of the number of guided learning hours per week and the Government have decided, therefore, that for benefit purposes, part-time further education courses in England will be defined as courses up to 16 guided learning hours.

The concept of guided learning hours does not apply in Northern Ireland and consideration is being given to definitions that will reflect the education system in Northern Ireland. The new rules will be designed so that the same number of people can study part time while claiming unemployment benefits as do so now.

School Pupils

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial commitment the Government will give to a strategy within the primary and secondary sector to address low achievement levels among young people in the non-grammar school sector in Northern Ireland using professsionally qualified teachers. [17066]

Mr. Ancram: Some £20 million is being made available over the next three years to support an initiative aimed at addressing the problem of low achievement by pupils in a number of primary and secondary—non-grammer—schools in Northern Ireland. Selected schools will bid for the additional resources on the basis of school improvement plans which they must prepare.

University of Ulster

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that the education and training services provided by the proposed new university of Ulster campus will complement the existing services in the west Belfast community. [17070]

Mr. Ancram: The Government have given no commitment to the proposed new university of Ulster campus at Springvale. The findings of an economic appraisal, and a report by the Northern Ireland Higher Education Council, both of which are expected shortly, will have to be fully considered before any firm view can be taken.

Prison Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the official total cell capacity and (b) the inmate prison population in each prison in Northern Ireland on 24 March 1995. [17237]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

Establishment	Total cell capacity	Number of prisoners
Her Majesty's Prison Belfast	413	293
Her Majesty's Prison Maghaberry	500	331
Her Majesty's Prison Magilligan	328	298
Her Majesty's Prison Maze	794	721
Her Majesty's Young Offenders Centre	295	198
Total	2,330	1,841

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount of drugs and explosives that have been detected for each of the past five years as a result of strip searching of convicted and remand prisoners in (a) female and (b) male establishments. [18134]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 3 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question relating to finds during full searches in Northern Ireland Prison Service establishments.

The information you requested in respect of female prisoners is set out below. Information in the form required in respect of male prisoners is unobtainable from records after 31 march 1993.

Part (a):

Finds of drugs and explosives that have been detected for each of the past five years as a result of full searching of convicted and remand prisoners in female establishments:

1.3.90–31.12.90: None

1.1.91–31.12.91: None

1.1.92–31.12.92: None

1.1.93–31.12.93: None

1.1.94–31.12.94: None

1.1.95–28.2.95: None

Part (b):

Finds of drugs and explosives that have been detected for each of the past five years as a result of full searching of convicted and remand prisoners in male establishments:

1.3.90–31.12.90: There were 5 incidences of finds of drugs. Precise quantities are not recorded.

1.1.91–31.12.91: There were 5 incidences of finds of drugs. Precise quantities are not recorded.

1.1.92–31.12.92: There were 14 incidences of finds of drugs. Precise quantities are not recorded.

1.1.93–31.3.93: There were 3 incidences of finds of drugs. Precise quantities are not recorded.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the launch of the Northern Ireland Prison Service as an executive agency of the Northern Ireland Office. [18766]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Prison Service was established as an executive agency on 1 April 1995. I have set a number of key performance targets for the agency to achieve in its first year. These are as follows:

> To ensure 100 per cent. security for prisoners in high and top risk categories.
> To ensure at least 99.5 per cent. security for prisoners in medium and low risk categories.
> To ensure that the number of significant breaches of order and control does not exceed 159, this being the average for the previous three years. This figure will also form the baseline for future years.
> To increase the proportion of prisoner places with access to sanitation at all times of the day and night from 70 per cent. to 80 per cent.
> To increase the amount of time available for vocational training and occupational services from four hours per day to five hours and for education from 4.5 hours per day to six hours.
> To devise a system of regime monitoring and set baselines for each establishment.
> To implement the following programme to improve further the links between prisoners and their families:
> publishing a visitors charter approved by the Northern Ireland charter unit for HMP Magilligan and HM YOC Hydebank Wood; > extending the use of payphones to all establishments; and opening additional visiting accommodation at HMP Maghaberry
> To offer all eligible prisoners at HM Magilligan and HMP Maghaberry a sentence plan and to achieve a 50 per cent. uptake;
> To ensure that the average annual cost per prisoner place does not exceed £73,122.

Copies of the framework document which sets out the terms within which the agency will operate will be placed in the Library, along with its first corporate and business plan.

Abortion Law

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the report on the abortion laws in Northern Ireland published by the Northern Ireland Family Planning Association, a copy of which has been sent to him. [17283]

Mr. Moss: I welcome the report in that it contains information and views which will further inform the current debate on the law on abortion in Northern Ireland.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who appoints (a) chairmen and (b) members of health trusts in Northern Ireland; and what is the criteria for their appointment. [17267]

Mr. Moss: All appointments to the boards of HSS Trusts in Northern Ireland are made by the Department of Health and Social Services, with the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend. All appointments are made on the basis of merit and there are no formal criteria for appointment. However, those appointed are likely to have some or all of the following attributes:

> an understanding of top management in a large organisation;
> a relevant specialist skill or knowledge;
> experience of the voluntary sector, preferably at senior management or committee level;
> living or working in the area to be served by the trust;
> willingness to give the necessary time commitment.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the social security benefits generally available to United Kingdom citizens between the years 1980 and 1994; and where the implementation of identical legislation led to different decisions being reached in Northern Ireland compared with the rest of the United Kingdom. [17512]

Mr. Moss: Benefits generally available to United Kingdom citizens from 1980 to 1994 are listed in:

> "The Government's Expenditure Plans"
> "Northern Ireland Commentary on Public Expenditure Plans"
> "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities: the Government's Expenditure Plans"
> Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Social Security benefits are available in Northern Ireland on the same basis as they are in Great Britain. It would not be appropriate to comment on the merits of individual cases as these are decided in accordance with the relevant law by independent adjudication authorities in the respective jurisdictions. Anyone who is dissatisfied with these decisions has the right to invoke the statutory review and appeal procedures.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17735]

Sir John Wheeler: In line with the open Government code of practice published in April 1994, the Northern Ireland civil service will be developing a strategy for making information available to the public domain through electronic means, including the Internet. CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, have established a "presence" on the Internet for UK Government and some information from Northern Ireland Departments has already been made available to the public using this service. For example, the business development service of the Department of Finance and Personnel arranged for the publication of the joint framework document, UK papers, on the CCTA server. Currently none of the Ministers or Northern Ireland Departments have official addresses on the Internet. However, a number of NICS officials have mail boxes which are accessed through CCTA GTNet service.

Drugs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 665, if he will list the number of occasions and dates when evidence in relation to drugs offences was available and appropriate action was taken. [17641]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morely: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of Blue Tongue were reported in each year since 1980. [17816]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of Aujesky's disease were reported in each year since 1985. [17811]

Mr. Ancram: Aujesky's disease has been notifiable in Northern Ireland only since February 1993. Nine cases of Aujesky's disease were notified in 1993 and eight in 1994. A scheme to eradicate Aujesky's disease in Northern Ireland was introduced in September 1994.

Hospital Provision

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to receive the report from Mr. James McKenna on hospital provision. [17846]

Mr. Moss: The acute hospitals reorganisation project chaired by Dr. James McKenna is looking at a wide range of specialities currently provided in the Royal Group of Hospitals Trust and the Belfast City Trust. I expect to receive a number of reports from Dr. McKenna over the next year.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests there have been from domestic consumers to have their water metered in each of the past five years in Northern Ireland. [17976]

Mr. Moss: None.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the water and sewerage in Northern Ireland, industrial and domestic, is paid for on a metered basis. [17978]

Mr. Moss: Approximately 17.5 per cent. of the annual expenditure on water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland is met from metered charges.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the principal water catchment ares in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the rest of Ireland. [17974]

Mr. Moss: The principle water catchment areas in Northern Ireland are:

The Mourne mountains
The Antrim plateau
The Sperrin mountains
Lough Neagh basin
Lough Erne catchment
Foyle valley

The last three of these straddle the border with the Republic of Ireland. I do not have information on the water catchment areas for the rest of Ireland.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many domestic properties in Northern Ireland are metered for the purpose of paying for water and sewerage; and what percentage this is of the total number of households; [17977]

(2) how many households have been disconnected for non-payment of water charges in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years. [17973]

Mr. Moss: The water supplied to a property which is used solely for domestic purposes is not metered and is not subject to disconnection.

The water supplied to a property which has mixed domestic and other use may be metered and is subject to disconnection for non-payment of water charges.

The total number of disconnections for non-payment of water charges in Northern Ireland in each of the past five financial years is set out in the table. Information on disconnections of metered supplies with a domestic content could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

1991–92: 385
1992–93: 211
1993–94: 146

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations the Minister has received from which individuals or groups in Northern Ireland to privatise the water and sewerage industry in the Province. [17975]

Mr. Moss: Since the Government announced their intention to privatise water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland in 1992 there have been a number of representations from elected representatives, district councils, voluntary bodies and private individuals about the Government's plans. None of these has expressed support for water privatisation.

Peace and Reconciliation Programme

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to give technical assistance for the preparation of projects and applications for funds under the special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. [17463]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The draft guidelines for the special support programme stipulates that technical assistance should be made available during the preparation and implementation of the programme. In the preparation stage, it is a matter for the European Commission to offer any necessary assistance. It is likely that the programme will also include a provision to cover technical assistance during the implementation stage, but this will need to be agreed with the Irish authorities and the Commission.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will allow private sector companies to match finance for projects obtained from the special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. [17465]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Government welcome private sector contributions to projects which the structural funds support. Where activities merit and are eligible for support from the funds within the special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland, it is likely that there will be scope for the private sector and private finance to play their part. However, the programme has still to be drawn up in conjunction with the Irish authorities and then negotiated with the European Commission.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he (a) has had or (b) intends to have with European Commissioners concerning procedures through which the private sector could access resources from the special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. [17464]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The Government wish to maximise the private sector contribution to projects assisted under the structural funds and have forwarded to the European Commission proposals for facilitating private sector contribution to projects to which the European regional development fund makes grants. This issue is not specific to the special support programme for peace and reconciliation.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he had made of the European Commission guidelines concerning the ability of the private sector wholly to match finance projects eligible for support from the special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. [17466]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland and the border counties of Ireland is subject to the normal regulations governing the use of structural funds. The Government are awaiting the Commission response to UK proposals on the role of private sector matching funds in the context of these regulations.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to an hon. or right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18532]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18480]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18531]

(4) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18479]

Sir John Wheeler: Neither the Department nor the House of Commons POLIS unit collects information in the form requested.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the reception held at RUC Garnerville on 15 March 1995. [18313]

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of staging the RUC information forum on policing on 15 March 1995 at RUC Garnerville was £5,727.53.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what basis and on how many occasions the RUC has deployed an armoured car and two RUC constables to Surrey. [18312]

Sir John Wheeler: No armoured RUC vehicles, and consequently no associated constables, have been deployed elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Child Support

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make payments to those recipients of disability working allowance and family credit who lose income for the balance of the period of their existing claim to benefit as a result of the adjustments to the child support maintenance payments arising from the regulation changes to be introduced on 18 April and when; and if he will make a statement. [18764]

Mr. Moss: As will happen in the remainder of the United Kingdom, it is the intention to make such payments as soon as it is administratively possible to do so after the loss has been identified. In bringing forward the measure as part of the Child Support Bill now before the House, the Government have recognised that it is unreasonable not to offer compensation to working parents with care who are modestly paid, particularly as the structure of income support offers automatic adjustment for the incomes of those parents with care not at work and dependent on income support.

It would be unfair to wait until primary legislation receive Royal Assent, before considering compensation, as this would produce a large delay, which might cause hardship. Accordingly, payments will be in advance of both Royal Assent and of any estimate that could include provision for this compensation. Parliamentary approval for this provision will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of Health and Social Services, vote 4. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £25,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Northern Ireland contingencies fund.

Prior Options Studies

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what decisions have been reached on recently completed prior options studies carried out by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. [18765]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: These prior options studies were undertaken as part of a strategic review of the Department which examined how it might be reorganised and managed in the context of the Government reform initiative. As a result, it is proposed to create a further five next steps agencies dealing with the planning, environment, road and works services and the land registry and registry of deeds. These proposals will lead to radical restructuring of the Department which will involve a substantial shift in emphasis towards the Department becoming a purchaser rather than a direct provider of executive services. It is proposed that these Agencies will be launched and come into operation from 1 April 1996. When added to the Water Executive Agency, which is in the course of preparation for launch and five existing next steps agencies, the Department will have a total of 11 Agencies.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the future organisation of the Industrial Research and Technology Unit. [18810]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am pleased to announce that the Industrial Research and Technology Unit will be established as an executive agency of the Department of Economic Development with effect from 3 April 1995. It will be responsible for the promotion of industrially-relevant research, development and technology transfer in Northern Ireland. This new status will give IRTU the freedom to operate within a framework of appropriate efficiency targets and performance measures. The following targets have been set for 1995–96:

to deliver a marketing programme for the promotion of innovation; this programme will have particular emphasis on the role of middle managers, women in science and the importance of industrial design;

under the Compete programme to increase the average industrial contribution by 1 per cent. and participation by new users to 10 per cent.;

to deliver an awareness campaign to promote the benefits of good environmental management and through a series of initiatives to encourage industry to take appropriate action; to promote an increase of 20 per cent. in the use of national and worldwide databases;

to achieve a 20 per cent. increase in the uptake of IRTU's technical consultancy services;

to deliver a work programme to enable Government Departments to meet obligations for environmental protection, energy efficiency and health and safety at work; to achieve efficiency savings of 2.5 per cent.

to undertake an examination of the scope for market testing of the Unit's activities; to develop monitoring systems and, in association with the other DED businesses, deliver an appropriate action plan for targeting social need.

The policy and resources framework for the new agency is set out in the framework document, copies of which are being place in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Internet

Mr.Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super highway. [17732]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Department of Social Security is currently using Internet to provide and obtain information on a limited scale, and is actively considering further opportunities offered by the information super highway to improve its methods of communication. None of the Department's Ministers is currently linked to the Internet.

Pensions

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases in 1994 individuals were precluded from receiving payment of their retirement pension because of late application, under regulation 19(6)(b) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments Regulations) 1987. [17487]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the total population was old age pensioners in each year since 1974; and what assessment he has made of the relationship between the increase in benefit expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product from 1974–75 to 1994–95 and the increase in the percentage of old age pensioners in the population. [17679]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table. The data indicate that, although the number of people over state pension age as a percentage of the population of Great Britain has increased slightly over the period, this has not been the most significant factor in the increase in benefit expenditure as a percentage of GDP.

	Total benefit expenditure £ billion[1]	Money GDP £ billion[2]	Benefit expenditure as percentage of GDP	Population of Great Britain (000s)[3]	Number over state pension age in Great Britain (000s)	Number over state pension age as percentage of population

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current cost, gross and net, of increasing the basic state pension by £1 for a single pensioner and pro rata for a pensioner couple. [17688]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estimated cost for 1995–96 is £480 million gross[1] and £350 million net[2].

[1] GB and overseas costs.

[2] Offsetting effects on income-related benefits.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many instances in 1994 women failed to claim their retirement pension on reaching the age of 60 years in the last year. [17486]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available in the form requested. For the year ended March 1995, approximately 113,000 invitations to claim retirement pension were issued to men and women which did not result in a claim for benefit. These invitations are issued as a matter of course to people with potential entitlement to retirement pension as their 60th or 65th birthday approaches and, if they then fail to claim, again five years later.

Incapacity Benefit Appeals

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what he expects will be the time between the lodging of an appeal against the refusal of incapacity benefit and the subsequent tribunal hearing; and what plans he has to lay down performance standards in this respect; [17722]

(2) what is the average period between the lodging of an appeal against the refusal of invalidity benefit and the subsequent tribunal hearing; and what are the performance standards set down by him. [17718]

Mr. Hague: The administration of appeals is the responsibility of the President of the Independent Tribunal Service, His Honour Judge Bassingthwaighte. For 1994–95 he set an average clearance time of 28 weeks for invalidity benefit and other appeals heard by the social security appeal tribunals. This covered the time from lodgement of appeal to the date of tribunal hearing. The same target will apply to incapacity benefit and other social security appeal tribunal appeals in 1995–96. The latest performance figures for invalidity benefit appeals are for the quarter ending June 1994, when they were cleared on average in 26.6 weeks.

Prisoners (Housing Benefits)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much money will be saved by reducing housing benefits to prisoners; and what assessment he has made of the consequential effect on the numbers of prisoners and the effect on expenditure; [17506]

(2) what plans he has to increase the amount of housing benefit for newly released prisoners. [17505]

Mr. Roger Evans: We estimate that there could be up to 10,000 single prisoners in receipt of housing benefit in a full year at a cost of up to £10 million. By limiting benefit for single prisoners to a maximum of 13 weeks, we expect to save most of that. We are discussing the possible financial effects of the changes with interested Government Departments, however, we do not expect that there will be any impact on the prison population. On release from prison, ex-offenders will be able to claim help with their housing costs in the same way as other tenants.

Disability Discrimination

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the costs of the changes to the Disability Discrimination Bill proposed by the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People on 27 and 28 March; if he will itemise the cost of each change; and what he now expects to be the total cost of the Bill. [17802]

Mr. Hague: During consideration of the Disability Discrimination Bill on 27 and 28 March, I announced that the Government would seek to amend it in the Lords so that it would confer protection against discrimination on people who have had a disability that meets the Bill's definition and to take a power to make regulations to set accessibility standards for new public transport vehicles. I also announced that we proposed to incorporate within the Bill a number of measures which will ensure that providers of education give greater emphasis to the needs of pupils with special educational needs and students with learning difficulties and disabilities in planning their services. We have not yet finalised the necessary detailed changes to the Bill and therefore it is not possible to estimate the compliance costs.

A number of other amendments were made. These are designed to clarify the Bill's provisions and accordingly impose no new costs. It is, in any case, normal practice for more detailed estimates of the cost of new measures to accompany the publication of the regulations which will implement them, but an indication of the total cost of the Bill is contained in its compliance cost assessment, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Incomes

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, taking into account all available benefits, what would be the weekly income of (a) a single person, (b) a married person with a non-earning partner and (c) a married person with a non-earning partner and two children aged under 16 who was paid £3.50 an hour working (i) eight hours a week, (ii) 16 hours a week and (iii) 24 hours a week. [18082]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table. Entitlement to unemployment benefit has been assumed where this would be advantageous to the family type concerned. Earnings have also been assumed to be for a period that would allow for the highest benefit income. Eight hours' work has been assumed to represent one day's employment and 16 hours' work has been assumed to represent two day's employment.

To improve incentives to increase hours of work, two new measures will be introduced from October 1996. The back–to–work bonus will allow those who work part time while claiming jobseeker's allowance to build up a lump sum of up to £1,000. This will be payable when either the claimant or partner stops receiving jobseeker's allowance to go into work of 16 hours or more. In addition, a new in-work benefit aimed at couples and single people without children will be tested to examine its effects on increasing the gain from work, in the same way as family credit does now for families with children.

Notes:

1. Earnings for eight hours assumed to represent one day's employment. Earnings for 16 hours assumed to represent two day's employment.
2. All the examples shown assume take-up of full entitlement to the income-related and contributory benefits that would be most advantageous.
3. All the family types shown are assumed to live in local authority accommodation and be liable for average council tax and local authority rent.
4. Earnings are assumed to be £3.50 an hour.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he proposes to make to expedite payment arrangements to nationals of the EU who have won appeals to the tribunal against denial of benefit decisions under the habitual residence test, pending his Departments appeal against the tribunal verdict; what assessment he has made of hardship arising during the waiting period for his Department's further appeal and the appropriate arrangements to cover such hardship; and if he will make a statement. [18165]

Mr. Roger Evans: Where an adjudication officer has appealed to a social security commissioner against a decision of a social security appeal tribunal to award benefit, payment of that benefit may be suspended pending the outcome of the appeal. Decisions to suspend payment are made on a case by case basis by Benefits Agency staff acting on behalf of the Secretary of State. Payments of benefits should not be suspended where doing so would cause severe hardship. Statistics are not kept on the number of cases where payments are made because of hardship.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18334]

Mr. Roger Evans: A reduction of 2,532 posts has resulted from the award of contracts to private sector organisations for work that was previously done by civil servants.

A reduction of 993 posts has resulted from the efficiencies generated by civil servants whose bids to keep the work in-house were successful in a market test.

War Widows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the comparative totals of pension now received by (a) war widows and (b) widows on basic benefits currently received each year for all appropriate categories. [18159]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The rate of the basic war widow's pension awarded to the widow of a man whose death was due to service in the armed forces, depends on the late husband's rank. For the widow of a private, for example, the annual equivalent rate of the basic pension[1] is currently £3,897. The maximum annual pension for the widow of an officer is currently £4,621.

In addition, for the widow of a man whose service ended before 31 March 1973, a supplementary pension is paid; the annual equivalent is currently £2,541. Age allowances of £444, £856, and £1,273 are also payable at ages 65, 70 and 80 respectively. Most war widows now receive a total war widow's pension of about £7,294 a year. All of a war widow's pension is tax free.

Full details of the rates of war pensions and allowances are in the Naval, Military and Air Forces Etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Order, a copy of which may be found in the Library.

In comparison, the average pension currently received each year by a widow entitled to either widow's pension or widowed mother's allowance under the national insurance widow's benefits scheme is £2,995.

[1] Normally payable weekly.

Fraud

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the information on sector fraud referred to in the executive summary of the sector fraud report in relation to (a) central and south Derbyshire and (b) nationally in each of the last two available 12-month periods. [16162]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of fraud work is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the right hon. Member with such information as is avaialable.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Margaret Beckett, dated 3 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about sector fraud savings in Central and South Derbyshire and nationally. The information you requested is detailed below.

£ million

	1992–93	1993–94
Central and South Derbyshire
Weekly benefit savings	4.74	5.49
Instrument of payment savings	0.24	0.34
National Figures
Weekly benefit savings	487.14	535.62
Instrument of payment savings	23.68	45.1

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give details of instances, other than that of Marc Calder, where the personal details of a client of the Child Support Agency have been released publicly; [17093]

(2) what are his responsibilities to clients of the Child Support Agency in relation to the holding of personal details by the agency. [17095]

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Jamieson, dated 4 April 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency's responsibility to maintain client confidentiality.

The particular episode to which you refer is an isolated incident. Protecting clients' confidentiality is a cornerstone of the Agency's work, even when there is a great temptation to "put the record straight".

Information obtained in the course of deciding an application for child support is kept in the strictest confidence. An officer acting on behalf of the Secretary of State may use such information for benefit purposes, but it may not be passed to someone outside the Department of Social Security unless required, for example, by a child support appeal tribunal, or an authority dealing with housing benefit or council tax.

The disclosure of evidence is covered by child support legislation, and it is a criminal offence to disclose information without lawful authority. If any member of staff of the Agency is found to have disclosed personal details of a client without authorisatin, this will lead to disciplinary action. This may result in prosecution and/or dismissal.

TRANSPORT

Ship Accidents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in discussing the proposal put forward by George Livanos for a worldwide registration of ship accidents; and what consideration the International Maritime Organisation is giving to the proposal to establish a database on casualty statistics and investigations of shipping accidents by the sub-committee on flag state implementation. [17201]

Mr. Norris: Neither we nor the International Maritime Organisation have any record of Mr. Livanos' specific proposals. The IMO sub-committee on flag state implementation is working to the construction of a casualty database as a matter of priority. A correspondence group has been established to develop the work intersessionally and will report to the next session of FSI in February 1996.

Petrol

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the amount of (a) benzene and (b) aromatics compounds typically present in different grades of petrol; and what is the maximum permitted by law. [17700]

Mr. Norris: The composition of petrol varies significantly between refineries and between batches produced by the same refinery due to the processes used and the crude oil being processed. The latest available—1993—data from the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association indicates that the average percentage of benzene and aromatics, by volume, in different grades of petrol, on a sales adjusted basis, is as follows:

Percentage by volume

Petrol	4 star leaded	Unleaded premium	Unleaded super
Benzene	2.12	2.46	3.08
Aromatics	31	33	42

Benzene is controlled at a maximum of 5 per cent. by EC directive F5/210/EEC. There is no maximum limit for aromatics.

British Rail (Consultants)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which consultants his Department has appointed to advise on the information systems implications of rail privatisation; when they were appointed; and what was the value of the contracts. [18086]

Mr. Watts: Ernst and Young was appointed on 8 June 1993 to advise on the overall programme management of information systems to support the restructured railway industry. Information about the value of individual contracts is commercially confidential.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which consultants have been engaged by British Rail in the last three years to advise on information systems; on what dates they were appointed; and what was the value of the contracts. [18085]

Mr. Watts: I understand from British Rail since 1993–94 the following consultants have been engaged to advise on information systems: Andersons Consulting, AD Little, Focus on Research, Forecast, Gemini, Holmes and Marchant, IMPAC, INDECO, Price Waterhouse, Touche Ross and TQM. Information on consultants prior to that year is not readily available. Information about the value of individual contracts is commercially confidential.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received (a) formally and (b) informally in each of the past nine months in favour of claims for slots at Heathrow made by (i) United Airlines and (ii) American Airlines from (1) the airlines, (2) lobbyists and (3) hon. Members. [18081]

Dr. Mawhinney: I receive numerous representations concerning UK-US air services. The allocations of slots at Heathrow remains the responsibility of the independent Airport Co-ordination Ltd.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18335]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is given in the table:

Notes:

[1] Posts reduced as a result of "Competing for Quality", Cm 1730, the reporting of which does not accord with financial years. total reductions over the two financial years are shown in the table against 1994–95.

[2] Includes 123 posts which were market tested and work won by contractors.

[3] Reduction in posts reflects decline in demand for TRL services and contracting out work previously undertaken in-house; not possible to separately identify post reductions due to contracting-out activities.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of equal opportunity courses attended since beginning their appointment for each chief executive currently employed by his Department. [17891]

Mr. Norris: Three agency chief executives attended an equal opportunities seminar in autumn 1994. General management courses attended by agency chief executives during their careers will have included equal opportunities training.

Ferry Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct the Scottish rail users consultative committee, under the terms of section 78 of the Railways Act 1993, to consider the proposed withdrawal of the Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin ferry service, subject to the relevant provisions of section 56 of the Transport Act 1962; and if he will make a statement. [18164]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) made a direction under section 78 of the Railways Act 1993 on 9 May 1994. The effect was to allow the Rail Users Consultative Committee for Scotland to continue to exercise its functions under section 56(4) to (6) of the Transport Act 1962 in relation to ferry services provided by Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd.

Public Bodies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the appointments he has made to non-departmental bodies. [17892]

Mr. Norris: Most of the appointments made by my right hon. Friend to non-departmental bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1994", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Appointments are also made by my right hon. Friend to port authorities, the acting conservator of the River Mersey and to the honorary medical advisory panels.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what limitations there are on the number of passengers permitted to stand on (a) single-deck and (b) double deck passenger vehicles (i) in general public service and (ii) hired by education authorities for the transport of pupils. [17834]

Mr. Norris: The number of passengers permitted to stand on a public service vehicle either single or double deck, is usually determined as part of the issue of a certificate of initial fitness or certificate of conformity for the individual vehicle.

Some older PSVs, however, were not issued with such certificates, in these cases the number of standing passengers permitted is one third of the seating capacity, in the lower deck only for double-deck vehicles, or eight passengers, whichever is the less. Standing is not permitted on the upper deck of any PSV.

These requirements apply to all PSVs including those hired by education authorities.

Passenger Service Requirements

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how British rail operators will be penalised for ignoring the new passenger service requirements. [17366]

Mr. Watts: Franchise operators will enter into a contract with the franchising director through the franchise agreement, which will require them to operate the services specified in the passenger service requirement. If operators do not deliver a timetable compliant with PSR, the franchising director may impose penalties, or, as a last resort, terminate the franchise agreement.

In respect of the first four franchises for which PSRs have been developed, British Rail confirmed at the time of the PSR consultation that its operators will continue to operate the existing level of service until such time as services are franchised to the private sector. The PSR is based broadly on the existing BR timetable.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to inform the public of the new passenger service requirements; and what procedure they must follow in complaints about any operator not following the passenger service requirements. [17367]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director is currently considering the responses to a comprehensive consultation with rail users consultative committees and local authorities about the first four proposed passenger service requirements. These represent the detailed contractual framework within which operators must draw up their passenger timetable. Operators will be under an obligation to publish comprehensive information about their timetable.

Operators must submit to the franchising director details of their proposed timetable. The franchising director will ensure that these are compliant with the PSR and will also monitor the actual services run. The franchising director may impose penalties if the PSR is not delivered. If passengers have complaints about services, these should be directed in the first instance to the train operator, and if they remain dissatisfied they should refer to the appropriate RUCC.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when all railways will be given passenger service requirements; and if they will be managed uniformly. [17368]

Mr. Watts: A passenger service requirement will be included in each franchise agreement that the franchising director makes with a franchise operator for the provision of passenger services. The franchising director has a statutory objective to franchise passenger services as soon as is reasonably practicable, and has a target to franchise at least 51 per cent. of passenger services by April 1996. He is currently developing a performance regime that will apply to all franchise operators.

Publicity

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To as the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates of for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17640]

Mr. Norris: The spending by my Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and the latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96 are as follows:

(a) TV	5,052	4,193	4,335	n/a
(b) Radio	633	0	0	n/a
(c) Press (includes recruitment)	592	506	392	n/a
(d) Other	0	7	130	n/a
(e) Total	6,277	4,706	4,857	n/a
(f) Recruitment (percentage of total)	[1]8.2	[2]9.8	[1]5.5	[1]274.821

[1] Includes some or all costs for all agencies except the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency.

[2] Includes all costs for the Highways Agency, Coastguard and Marine Safety Agency.

[3] Includes all costs for the Central Transport Group, and senior staff in executive agencies at G5 level and above.

Expenditure plans by media for 1995–96 are not yet finalised.

Above figures exclude statutory advertising and advertising on road schemes.

Plutonium Nitrate

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now received from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority a copy of the full review of plutonium nitrate transport to which he referred in his answer of 2 November 1994, Official Report, column 1123. [17962]

Mr. Norris: The Department has recently been notified that the full review report, which includes the executive summary, is now available. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

WALES

Trunk Road Agencies

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusions he has reached on the pattern of trunk road agencies following local government reorganisation; and if he will make a statement. [18811]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Transition committees were invited to submit proposals for new trunk road agencies to replace the existing eight agencies after April 1996. Proposals were received from nine transition committees or groups of transition committees. These have been assessed and I have decided to appoint eight new agencies arranged geographically to give the minimum change from the present agency boundaries. This I believe will be welcomed in reducing disruption to staff and working procedures during the reorganisation.

I have selected the following proposals:

North East Wales—the proposal from the transition committees of Aberconwy and Colwyn, Denbighshire, Flintshire and Wrexham acting in partnership for the trunk roads in the area covering the present county of Clwyd plus Aberconwy.

North West Wales—the proposal from Caernarfonshire and Merionnethshire transition committee and supported by Anglesey transition committee but amended to exclude the trunk roads in the Aberconwy and Colwyn unitary authority for the trunk roads in the area covering the present county of Gwynedd less Aberconwy.

Mid Wales—the proposal from Powys transition committee for the trunk roads in the area of the present county of Powys.

West Wales—the proposal from Carmarthenshire transition committee, supported by Pembrokeshire and Cardiganshire transition committees for the trunk roads in the area covering the present county of Dyfed.

West Glamorgan—I have selected the proposal from Neath and Port Talbot transition committee in preference to the proposal from County of Swansea transition committee for the trunk road and motorway in the area covering the present county of West Glamorgan.

Mid Glamorgan—the joint proposal from Bridgend, Rhondda, Cynon Taff and Merthyr Tydfil transition committees for the trunk roads and motorway in the area covering the present county of Mid Glamorgan.

South Glamorgan—the proposal from Cardiff transition committee for the trunk roads and motorway in the area covering the present county of South Glamorgan.

Gwent—the joint proposal from Blaenau Gwent, Caerphilly, Monmouthshire, Newport and Torfaen transition committees for the trunk roads and motorways in the area covering the present county of Gwent.

Shadow authorities, when formed, will be asked to confirm their acceptance of the proposed agencies, to produce service delivery plans for detailed consideration by the Welsh Office, and to agree with the Welsh Office the terms of the new agency agreements to take effect from 1 April 1996.

I shall be reviewing the arrangements 12 months after their introduction and assessing their adequacy and viability particularly where the agencies have a relatively small trunk road mileage.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to ensure that patients in mental hospitals are allocated to wards on the basis of the severity of their illnesses rather than on their places of residence. [18080]

Mr. Richards: The responsibility for determining the level of need and the provision of appropriate services rests entirely with local health authorities. The decision to admit a patient to a specific hospital ward is a clinical one, taken at a local level and based on the needs of the individual.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report, column 343, concerning dentists in Gwynedd, how many of the general dental practitioners in Gwynedd on 31 December 1994 were (a) taking on new NHS patients and (b) treating adults on the NHS; and what was the corresponding number of dentists in Gwynedd on 31 December in each of the preceding five years. [17343]

Mr. Richards: Information is not held centrally on the number of dental practitioners taking on new NHS patients or specifically treating adults on the NHS at any given time. The number of practitioners in Gwynedd treating NHS patients, of any age, in each year from 1989 to 1993 was as follows:

	[1]Number of practitioners
30 September 1989	66
30 September 1990	69
31 December 1991	63
31 December 1992	63
31 December 1993	67

[1] Principals, assistants and vocational trainees.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family health services authorities have been unable to provide emergency dental services in each month since April 1991. [17393]

Mr. Richards: From information supplied by family health services authorities since August 1992, emergency dental services have operated in all Welsh authority areas except Dyfed. There was a period up to May 1993 when Gwynedd family health services authority was also unable to arrange such a clinic.

General dental practitioners provide emergency cover for their registered patients under their terms of service.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the increase or decrease in the number of dentists in each of the family health services authority areas in Wales between 1985 and 1995. [18270]

Mr. Richards: The information is given in the table:

	[1]Number of general dental practitioners
FHSA area	30 September 1985	31 December 1994	Change
Clwyd	87	119	+32
Dyfed	80	104	+24
Gwent	109	140	+31
Gwynedd	65	66	+1
Mid Glamorgan	119	123	+4
Powys	30	34	+4
South Glamorgan	129	134	+5
West Glamorgan	123	130	+7

[1] Principals, assistants and vocational trainees. Dentists working in more than 1 FHSA are counted in the FHSA where the majority of their work is performed.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received during the past 12 months concerning NHS dental services in Gwynedd; what steps he has taken over that period to overcome the problem; and what has been the effect of these steps. [18301]

Mr. Richards: In the past 12 months 93 representations have been received about dental services in Gwynedd, including 57 from Members of Parliament. During the same period the Gwynedd family health services authority has received nearly £7,000 to cover the cost of local initiatives aimed at increasing NHS dental provision. A location incentive grant has also been agreed by the Welsh Office to assist a dentist to open a new practice in Dolgellau.

The Welsh Office has also provided a grant of £50,000 to the health authority to enable it to purchase extra community dental sessions and continues to support the Gwynedd family health services authority salaried dental service. On 30 January, my right hon. Friend announced that he is making a further £2.5 million available to improve dental services in the community.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what was (a) the highest and (b) the lowest level of remuneration paid by his Department to full-time general dental practitioners in Wales during the most recent year for which figures are available. [18272]

Mr. Richards: General dental practitioners are independent contractors paid, in the main, on an item-of-service basis. The concept of "full time" does not therefore apply and information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists there are currently being trained in the University of Wales; and what assessment he made of whether this number is adequate to meet demand. [18303]

Mr. Richards: There are 117 dental students in Wales. Following the last review of medical and dental manpower there was an expansion of 20 per cent. at the Welsh dental school compared with a reduction of 10 per cent. elsewhere. The Welsh dental school is now at full capacity. Dental manpower is assessed on a UK basis and the present manpower strategy is based upon the recommendations of the dental strategy review group which reported in 1982. The situation is being kept under review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many salaried dentists there were employed in each of the family health services authority areas in Wales on 31 March; and if he will make a statement. [18271]

Mr. Richards: Three salaried general dental practitioners were employed on 31 March 1995, one each by Gwynedd, Dyfed and Powys family health services authorities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when did he last met representatives of the British Dental Association to discuss problems relating to NHS dentistry in Wales; and what was the outcome of such discussions. [18302]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has not previously met representatives of the British Dental Association but has indicated his willingness to meet representatives of the profession in Wales at an appropriate time, if requested. Welsh Office officials maintain regular contact with those representatives.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the expenditure by his Department on NHS dentistry services in the county of Gwynedd in each of the past five years. [18304]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is as follows:

Expenditure on NHS dentistry services in Gwynedd

	£000
1989–90	2.537
1990–91	3.031
1991–92	3.623
1992–93	5.115
1993–94	4.787

Thyroid Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of thyroid cancer were reported in each of the health authorities in Wales in each of the last 10 years; and what the average was for Wales in each of those years. [17136]

Mr. Richards: The latest available information is given in the table.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of children in nursery schools in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17399]

Mr. Richards: The number of children in maintained nursery schools in each county in Wales, as at January 1994, is as follows:

Rheumatology Services

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the proposed rheumatology service for Gwent following the withdrawal of one of the consultants. [17419]

Mr. Richards: The provision of this service is a matter for Gwent Health Commission and its providers. However, I understand that interviews for a replacement consultant rheumatologist will be held this month. Gwent Health Commission assures me that arrangements have been put in place to provide consultant cover until this post is filled, so that the quality and level of service will not suffer.

Health Service (Patient Choice)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to ensure that Mrs. Griffin's children can be treated for chemical poisoning at the Breakspeare hospital; and if he will make a statement. [17381]

Mr. Richards: This is not a matter in which it is appropriate for me to become involved. Hospital referrals are a matter for the clinical judgment of the general practitioner, and are arranged in conjunction with the relevant health authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his policy concerning the wish of patients to join or remain on the list of a general practitioner; and if he will make a statement; [17383]

(2) if he will consult the Clwyd family health services authority to ensure that Mrs. Griffin of Bockley might be enabled to remain on the list of a general practitioner of her choice; if he will meet Mrs. Griffin; and if he will make a statement. [17382]

Mr. Richards: The family health services authority is responsible for managing general medical services in its area, and no useful purpose would be served by the meeting proposed.

Patients have the right to join the list of any GP willing to accept them. Doctors, as independent contractors, have the right to remove patients from their practice list without being required to offer an explanation. Patients also have the right to withdraw from a doctor's list without giving reasons. This is because it is considered essential to the practice of good medicine that a doctor and patient have mutual trust and confidence in each other.

Patients who are unable to find a doctor willing to accept them on their list can be allocated to a GP by the family health services authority.

Prescribing Costs

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice the Welsh Office has given on indicative budgets for general practitioners in Gwent. [17412]

Mr. Richards: The Department's letter of 31 January 1995 to family health services authorities in Wales gave guidance on the allocation of resources for GP prescribing in 1995–96. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average spending on drugs by (a) fundholders and (b) non-fundholders in the latest available quarter. [17394]

Mr. Richards: Information for the quarter ending 31 December 1994 is as follows:

	Average cost per patient per quarter £
Fundholders	20.15
Non fundholders	22.41

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions there have been between the Welsh Development Agency, the Welsh Office and the Regional Commissioner of the European Community concerning possible grant allocations to the Welsh Development Agency and the principle of additionality; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of such discussions. [17697]

Mr. Redwood: There have been no such discussions but Welsh Office officials meet regularly with the WDA to discuss a wide range of issues, including financial matters.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department approved the redundancy cost for the 19 staff previously employed by the Welsh Development Agency's small firms service and youth training scheme sections, as provided for in point 8 of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the 1991–92 accounts; and under what statutory authority the payments were authorised. [18169]

Mr. Redwood: Redundancy costs were approved on 21 February and 14 March 1991 respectively.

The agency may make redundancy compensation payments under schedule 1 to the Welsh Development Agency Act 1975.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department approved the redundancy cost for the staff previously employed by the Welsh Development Agency's utility services function, as provided for in point 8 of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General's commentary on the 1991–92 accounts; and under what statutory authority the payments were authorised. [18168]

Mr. Redwood: The costs of transferring these services, which included but did not separately identify redundancy costs, were agreed on 27 March 1990.

The agency may make redundancy compensation payments under schedule 1 to the Welsh Development Agency Act 1975.

NHS Pay

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to await the conclusion of an enabling agreement by the Nurses and Midwives Negotiating Council before promoting any local pay settlements for nurses; and if he will make a statement. [17869]

Mr. Richards: NHS trusts have freedom to negotiate local deals. However, an enabling provision in the national terms and conditions of service will facilitate local pay bargaining.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the administrative costs borne by the NHS in Wales under the present national pay bargaining system; what estimate he has made of the likely level of comparable costs under localised pay bargaining; and if he will make a statement. [18249]

Mr. Redwood: Localised pay bargaining costs will be contained within existing management resources.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the level of pay increases (a) awarded and (b) offered to (i) chief executives of NHS trusts and health authorities in Wales, (ii) managerial staff generally and (iii) accounts staff in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [18247]

Mr. Redwood: NHS trusts have the freedom to determine their own pay arrangements; information on the level of pay increase is not available for staff who have opted for such terms. Salaries of chief executives will be published in trusts' annual reports with effect from 1 April 1995. Chief executives of health authorities had an increase of 2.2 per cent. pay with effect from 1 September 1994 and are entitled to a supplement reflecting individual performance.

Managerial and accounts staff retaining national terms received a 2.2 per cent. pay rise from 1 September 1994 and are also entitled to individual performance related supplements.

Negotiations are under way for the 1995 pay round.

Job Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18337]

Mr. Redwood: Cadw has contracted two jobs to the private sector. Its staff numbers fell by 32 between 31 March 1993 and 31 March 1995.

NHS Research and Development

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to advertise for the post and appoint a new director of research and development for the national health service in Wales. [18167]

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on Monday 3 April 1995, Official Report Column 975.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the date of the departure of the former director of research and development for the national health service in Wales, Mr. Ian Russell; and what factors led to the delay in appointing a successor. [18166]

Mr. Richards: Professor Ian Russell departed from his post as director of the office of research and development NHS Wales on 31 December 1994. The opportunity has been taken to review the future function and setting of the office of research and development. These have now been agreed.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Local Government Management Board regarding central funding for reorganisation appeals; if he will make it his policy to introduce funding in full for such appeals; and if he will make a statement. [18241]

Mr. Redwood: I have received no such representations. I have no plans to provide funding for appeals on staffing matters which result from local government reorganisation. The revenue settlement for 1995–96 takes account of a number of reorganisation costs, such as these, which will fall to local authorities.

Radiological Protection

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Health and Safety Executive concerning the discontinuation of the forms KH 10a, b and c as regards the monitoring to adequate standards and statutory requirements of radiological protection for patients and staff. [18245]

Mr. Redwood: It was not necessary to consult the Health and Safety Executive before dropping these forms. The responsibility for maintaining adequate standards and meeting statutory requirements for the radiological protection of patients and staff is the responsibility of the district health authority or trust. The Welsh Office will shortly be issuing guidance to the health service in Wales setting out statutory requirements and general advice on the use of ionising radiation.

Stillbirths and Infant Deaths

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the relative merits of (a) the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy statistical exercise and (b) the discontinued form LHS 27/1; if he will list the principal points of difference between the two; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in Wales is a detailed study of deaths of babies after the onset of labour and within the first two weeks of life where the birthweight was greater than 1499 grammes and there and there was no gross or life-threatening abnormality. It seeks to inform and improve clinical practice by increasing the understanding of ways in which numbers of deaths might be diminished, with particular regard to identifying departures from accepted standards of care which could have played a part in the ensuing death.

The discontinued LHS 27/1 return simply recorded the total number of live births and stillbirths to residents of the district health authority and births, stillbirths and deaths in the first 28 days, analysed by weight. It was discontinued as the central requirements that it covered were available routinely from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Kwiksave, Prestatyn

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he intends to make to Kwiksave with regard to their consultation on the closure of their Prestatyn depot and the transfer of jobs to England. [18238]

Mr. Richards: Kwiksave is keeping me informed on the proposed closure of its distribution depot at Prestatyn, which represents a loss of 20 per cent. of the work force at the site. Targed is also aware of the proposal and stands ready to do all that it can to ensure that any future training needs are catered for.

While all job losses are regrettable, Kwiksave will nevertheless remain a major employer in Prestatyn and in north Wales.

Non-teaching Staff

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority all categories of non-teaching staff employed (a) in schools and (b) outside schools, indicating which are considered to be administrative staff; and what is the ratio to teachers. [17653]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Numbers of non-teaching staff in schools are collected through the annual schools census. The following list shows the categories of staff for which information is collected by type of school. Information about numbers in each category is available from each local education authority.

Nursery
Class I nursery assistants
Class II nursery assistants
NNEB students in training
Permanent supply nursery assistants
Primary
NNEB qualified nursery assistants
NNEB students in training
Other assistants/aides employed in the class room
Clerical/office workers
Secondary
Special needs support staff (including ancillary sessional workers)
Laboratory or workshop technicians
Resource technicians
Nurses/matrons
Office or clerical staff including library assistants
Special
Qualified nursing/childcare staff
Unqualified nursing/child care staff
Qualified ancillary staff
Unqualified ancillary staff

The Local Government Management Board collects information about local authority staff employed outside schools. Figures are compiled of the number of full-time and part-time non-manual staff employed in the education service, other than lecturers and teachers. This category comprises all non-manual staff identified as employed within the education service and includes administrative, secretarial and clerical staff, youth and community workers, nursery and other non-teaching classroom assistants, library staff serving educational establishments, education psychologists and careers guidance staff. Figures for individual education authorities are not released into the public domain because estimates at this level of disaggregation are not considered sufficiently reliable by the LGMB.

The use of different terminology defining the categories used in the schools census forms means that it is not possible to eliminate double counting of the same people in the LGMB figure and the school census results. A ratio of administrative staff to teachers can therefore not be calculated.

North East Wales Institute

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total cost of (a) the Touche Ross report into the financial affairs of the North East Wales Institute commissioned by the Higher Education Funding council for Wales, (b) the subsequent Touche Ross report entitled "NEWI Outline Structure Recovery Plan" and (c) the work undertaken to date with regard to NEWI by Mr. Fuller of Touche Ross and his associates. [17861]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The report commissioned by the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales cost £45,237. The subsequent report and the consultancy work were commissioned and paid for by NEWI and the cost of these is a matter for the Institute.

Examination Achievements

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils in each of the last three years have gained grades A to C in English, Mathematics and Science, and what percentage this was of the year group. [17992]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The following table shows the number of 15-year-old pupils in Wales who gained grades A to C in 1992 and 1993, and those who gained A*–C in 1994, in the specified GCSE subjects. Percentages are calculated on the basis of pupils aged 15 at the start of the academic year, as it is not known in which year group examination candidates are taught.

Pupils aged 15[1] achieving GCSE grade A (A)—C*

	1992		1993		1994
	Number of pupils	Per cent. of age group	Number of pupils	Per cent. of age group	Number of pupils	Per cent. of age group
English[2]	14,398	42.4	13,717	42.8	14,924	46.2
Mathematics	11,568	34.1	11,645	36.3	12,834	39.7
Science[3]	11,972	35.3	12,123	37.8	12,476	38.6
Combination[4]	8,650	25.5	8,227	25.7	9,256	28.6

Notes:

[1] Pupils aged 15 at August 31 of previous year.

[2] Includes pupils' better result of English language and literature.

[3] Includes pupils' best science result.

[4] Pupils achieving the combinations of mathematics, science and english GCSEs grades A(A*)—C. Includes pupils' best result in science and the better result of English first language and Welsh first language. Figures for the combination of mathematics, science and english alone are not available.

DEFENCE

Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for the Army's Base Storage and Distribution Organsiation. [18855]

Mr. Soames: The Army's Base Storage and Distribution Organisation will become a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence on 4 April 1995. The agency will be responsible for storing and distributing a vast range of general and technical stores, ammunition and vehicles and fuels to meet the Army's requirements in peace, crisis and war. In addition, the agency will provide a training environment for field Army personnel to gain the skills in storage and distribution functions to operate logistic bases in combat zones and theatres of operations.

The agency, to be known as the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency will comprise a small headquarters at Andover which will manage the operation of seven base storage depots in the United Kingdom, together with their supporting distribution outlets, and three base storage depots in Germany. The agency currently employs some 5,700 civilian staff and 600 military personnel.

As the first chief executive, Brigadier K. J. W. Goad will be offered new opportunities to build on the current organisation's professional expertise and high performance standards. Through a more commercial approach, the chief executive will actively seek to improve the efficiency of his organisation and thereby fulfil the agency's aim of providing its customers with an efficient service which offers the best value for money. The chief executive has been set the following key targets for financial year 1995–96:

1. Deliver to customers by the required delivery date at least 99 per cent. immediate, 98 per cent. high priority, 97 per cent. medium priority and 95 per cent. routine demands.
2. Deliver a military logistic support capability which the field Army can deploy worldwide, meeting at least a satisfactory opeval standard.
3. Introduce by 31 March 1996 formal tasking agreements with main ABSDA customers, and establish performance standards and annual targets for service improvement.
4. Complete by 31 March 1996 a competing for quality review of £5,000,000 (operating costs) of ABSDA business activities.
5. Achieve by 31 March 1996 a further 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency.
6. Close by 31 March 1996 17 storage depots in accordance with the programme endorsed by the defence costs study.
7. Introduce accruals accounting during the first year of operation and produce a set of "shadow" accounts for 1995–96.
8. Define by 31 March 1996 ABSDA's future financial and business information needs as a statement of requirement for a corporate management information system.

I shall arrange for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of the house.

Transport and Movements Executive

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Directorate of Transport and Movements (Army). [18856]

Mr. Soames: The Directorate of Transport and Movements (Army) will become a Defence Agency of the Ministry of Defence on 4 April 1995 when its name will change to the Defence Transport and Movements Executive. As a fully rationalised tri-service organisation, the main focus of DTMX will continue to be concentrated at its headquarters at Andover, alongside the Quartermaster General's headquarters. It will in due course absorb the surface freight functions carried out by the Navy Department, Air Force Department and the MOD Procurement Executive. The agency has other assets and personnel located at Marchwood military port, Bicester international freight terminal and the Ministry of Defence main building. In all there are some 250 staff comprising 92 military and 158 civilian.

The role of the agency is to provide an agreed transport and movements service for the world-wide support of HM armed forces, the MOD and other Government Departments and sponsored organisations. In so doing, it will meet the appropriate operational logistic support requirements in peacetime, crisis, transition to war and war for all its customers within agreed standards by the most efficient and cost-effective means available.

As the first chief executive, Brigadier M.G.R. Hodson CBE will be afforded greater responsibility and flexibility to build on the current organisation's professional ability and reputation for excellence. This in turn will provide the framework and ethos to give him the essential delegations and autonomy to interface effectively with industry whilst still retaining the military control necessary for policy and planning, which is so essential to mount military operations in any theatre. By adopting a more commercial approach, the chief executive will strive to improve efficiency and value for money and by so doing fulfil the agency's requirement to manage and control an effective operational transport and movements system that supports and sustains the armed forces world wide, while offering best value for money.

The chief executive has been set the following challenging key targets for the first year of operation:

1. To confirm and satisfy the operational requirement through the achievement of a satisfactory operational evaluation.
2. To develop with the owner by August 1995 criteria to measure DTMX's fitness for its wide peacetime transport and movements role.
3. To provide an agreed transport and movements service which meets the standard priority system requirements, as laid down in Department regulations (JSP 336), to time in 95 per cent. of cases.
4. To implement the agency's competing for quality strategy including specifically:
   a. To investigate partnering for Falkland Islands resupply by 1 December 1995.
   b. To complete the statement of requirement for the tri-service freight distribution market test by November 1995 and issue invitation for tender by January 1996.
5. To introduce a system for accruals accounting by:
   a. Developing an accounts feeder system and interim accruals accounting system by 1 September 1995 prior to the introduction of the ASCOT accruals accounting system by 31 March 1996.
   b. Producing accruals accounts for 1995–96 for a shadow NAO audit in order to produce accruals accounts for 1996–97 for a full NATO audit.
6. To reduce by 2 per cent. annually the ratio of DTMX management overheads compared to the total value of overall business.
7. To identify the potential utilisation and throughput at Marchwood military port and 25 Squadron Royal Logistic Corps, Bicester in order to provide a base line against which future targets can be set for the utilisation of owned assets.
8. To complete the initial development, basic installation and staff training for the DTMX management information system and activity-based costing system as defined in the IS strategy by 31 March 1996.
9. To introduce by 31 March 1996 service level agreements with the main DTMX customers and suppliers and establish performance standards and annual targets for service delivery and improvement.

I shall arrange for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of the House.

Rescue Co-ordination Centre

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future location of the rescue co-ordination centre Pitreavie and Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland. [18857]

Mr. Soames: As a consequence of the "Front Line First" recommendation to close the maritime headquarters at Pitreavie by April 1996, it was originally intended to relocate the rescue co-ordination centre and Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland to RAF Leuchars. Subsequent studies have, however, identified that substantial operational advantages and cost savings would be gained by relocating RCC Pitreavie to RAF Kinloss, which would subsequently become the home for the new, single national military rescue co-ordination centre by 31 March 1997. The proposed relocation of RCC Pitreavie to RAF Kinloss, which would involve the transfer of 36 posts, 30 service and six civilian, will be subject to the usual process of consultation with the trade unions. AOSNI and his staff will relocate from Pitreavie to RAF Leuchars as originally planned, at which time the post will be combined with that of station commander.

Sub-strategic Nuclear Capability

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's sub-strategic nuclear capability. [18913]

Mr. Soames: In 1993 the Government announced that in the longer term we would utilise the flexibility of the Trident system to under take the sub-strategic as well as the strategic nuclear role. I am pleased to say that the arrangements for this are progressing well. The Trident system will provide a continuously available sub-strategic capability when the second submarine—HMS Victorious—joins the patrol cycle around the end of this year, and the capability will be fully robust when HMS Vigilant enters service in 1998. In the light of this we have decided that the WE177 free-fall bomb should be withdrawn from service by the end of 1998.

Seized Documents

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the practice of his Department in respect of the classification of documents as company documents; and if the documents referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 21 July 1994, Official Report, column 554, as company documents were the personal copy of a director of board minutes and related documents. [17009]

Mr. Soames [holding reply 28 March 1995]: I have nothing further to add to my answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 21 July 1994, Official Report, column 554.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which minister authorised the raid by the Ministry of Defence police on the officers of British Manufacture and Research Company in April 1990; who now has possession of the documents seized; when he expects that the documents; will be returned to the former chairman; and if he will make a statement. [18242]

Mr. Soames: No ministerial approval was either needed or given. The Ministry of Defence police were acting properly within their legal powers to pursue a criminal investigation and it would have been quite improper for Ministers to intervene. The documents seized were returned to the official receivers in June 1993. They were all regarded as company documents and treated as such throughout the Ministry of Defence police investigation.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department took possession of documents taken from the company BMARC; on what date these documents were handed over to the Scott inquiry; and if he will list the Ministers who had access to these documents within his Department. [18300]

Mr. Soames: Documents from Astra/BMARC premises were seized by Ministry of Defence Police on several occasions between March and August 1990. These were not MOD-owned documents and were returned to the receivers of Astra in June 1993. The question of the provision of any of these documents to the Scott inquiry is one for the receivers of the inquiry. No Minister had access to the documents which had been seized by the Ministry of Defence police for the purposes of an investigation into alleged corruption.

Statutory References

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what statutory references to hon. Members have been made in legislation introduced by his Department, or its predecessors, since 1965. [17036]

Mr. Soames: An analysis of the legislation sponsored by my Department and its predecessors since 1965 for references to hon. Members could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Although officers of state are regularly mentioned in legislation, it would be extremely unlikely for reference to be made specifically to an individual hon. Member.

Chemical and Biological Substances

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to instigate a study into the long-term health effects of exposure to chemical and biological substances. [17288]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no evidence that either civilian or service personnel have been exposed to harmful levels of chemical and biological substances which would justify such a study.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the differences between the position adopted by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America, (c) Australia and (d) Canada in respect of Government provision for ex-service men exposed to chemical and biological substances. [17284]

Mr. Soames: No formal assessment has been made, but legal, health and welfare provisions are known to differ. Not all countries have a national health service; and not all countries' laws allow their citizens, including serving and former members of the armed forces, to pursue legal action through the courts for damages against the state. In the UK, in addition to the above and to the comprehensive system of social security benefits, the Department of Social Security makes provision for war pensions under which former service personnel who suffer an injury or illness which is attributable to service, howsoever caused or by whatever agent, may be entitled to a pension or gratuity.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's investigation of farm workers exposed to organic phosphates in drawing up its own evaluations of the effects of exposure to chemical or biological weapons. [17286]

Mr. Soames: The structure and purpose of organophosphorous nerve agents differ significantly from those of organophosphorous sheep dips. Nerve agents are intended to produce immediate acute effects and can kill in minutes. They principally attack the body through the respiratory system, although some also attack through the skin. For full effect, the nerve agent will need to vaporise over time and result in a downwind hazard. On the other hand, organophosphorous sheep dips have a much reduced mammalian toxicity and there is no requirement for the material to vaporise over time as the route of attack is through contact with the insects. Sheep dip compounds have extremely low volatility, thus rendering any inhalation exposure insignificant. The assessment made by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food into alleged health problems experienced by farm workers, therefore, have little relevance to the effects of exposure to chemical or biological weapons.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's liaison with (a) the USA, (b) Canada and (c) Australia in respect of studies of chemical weapons and defences against their use since 1965. [17289]

Mr. Soames: There are a number of agreements with NATO allies covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment. The following international agreements include chemical and biological defence in their scope:

a. The United Kingdom, United States and Canada memorandum of understanding on chemical and biological defence with addresses research, development, production and procurement of chemical and biological defence equipment. This was signed in 1980 and has been an extremely effective means of ensuring close collaboration between the three countries.

b. NATO army armaments group panel VII on nuclear, biological and chemical defence and its sub-panels and working groups which are the main NATO forums. CB defence is also discussed by other NATO panels and by the NATO defence research group.

c. The United Kingdom-United States-Canada-Australia American, British and Canadian Armies agreement between the Armies of the four countries. This includes a group known as the Quadrupartite Working Group which has a panel on NBC defence.

d. The United Kingdom, United States, Canada, Australia air standardisation co-ordinating committee agreement which also has a sub-group addressing CB defence.

e. The United Kingdom and United States navies have an information exchange agreement which includes NBC defence in its scope.

f. The technical co-operation programme which involves the United Kingdom, United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand is concerned with collaboration in defence research and has a sub-group that is active on CB defence.

g. The Anglo-French defence research group allows the exchange of information and collaboration on research for CB defence.

h. The Anglo-Netherlands-Norwegian collaboration project exchange of information and collaboration on research for CB defence.

i. FINABEL, an army-army agreement covering CB defence information exchange between Britain, France, Italy, Netherlands, Germany, Spain and Belgium.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will instigate a compensation scheme similar to that of the United States for former service men and volunteers exposed to chemical and biological weapons. [17285]

Mr. Soames: Any person who is disabled by an injury or illness due to service in her Majesty's forces may be entitled to a gratuity or a pension under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons Porton Down volunteers are denied the use of Ministry of Defence medical facilities to investigate their ill health with particular reference to long-term health effects of exposure to organic phosphates. [17287]

Mr. Soames: The role of the defence medical services is to train armed forces medical personnel and to provide a health care service for serving members of the armed forces. Responsibility for the health care of those who have left the armed forces rests with the national health service. With regard to Porton Down volunteers, my Department has no evidence that participation in human volunteer studies over the last 40 years has resulted in any long-term adverse health effects.

Defence Attachés

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the methods of appointments of defence attachés in embassies. [17238]

Mr. Soames: None

Service Accommodation

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Government have decided on the appointment of a financial advisor to carry forward the sale of the married quarter estate. [17349]

Mr. Soames: As I said in my answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 22 March, Official Report, columns 216–18, we intend to develop proposals for the possible transfer of the married quarters estate to the private sector, on the basis of initial work undertaken for us last autumn by NatWest Markets. We are close to completing the competitive selection of financial advisers to assist us in this process.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1994, Official Report, column 819, when he now expects the surplus married quarters in Lacey street, Northumberland to be (a) sold or (b) made available for housing purposes. [18239]

Mr. Soames: Twelve surplus married quarters in Lacey street, Longhoughton, have been advertised for sale through the services discount scheme. The remaining 14 properties will be offered for sale in the same way if sufficient interest is demonstrated during the sale of the first phase. Any properties not taken up under the scheme will be offered for sale either to a housing association or on the open market.

Air Miss, Humberside

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, from what squadron and from what base were the four Royal Air Tornados that were involved in an air miss with an Air UK Fokker 50, 20 miles east of Ottringham, Humberside on 22 March; if he will send the hon. Member for Don Valley a copy of the accident report when it is published; and if he will make a statement. [17133]

Mr. Soames: This incident is under investigation by National Air Traffic Services. A report will be produced in due course and a copy placed in the Library of the House. The identity of the military aircraft concerned has not yet been confirmed.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are provided and arrangements made for the comfort and well-being of staff who (a) smoke and (b) do not wish to be affected by smoking at (i) the work station and (ii) rest, recreation and refreshment facilities at MOD main building, Whitehall, London. [18282]

Mr. Freeman: My Department's policy is that smoking in the main building is not allowed in the main reception areas, toilets, changing rooms, conference and function rooms, lifts and the staff restaurant, except for the bar and a designated smoking area. In addition, smoking is prohibited in stairwells, the escalator area and all corridors. Smoking areas are available in two areas of the ground floor and some lift areas and within designated areas of the staff restaurant. The policy within individual offices is decided by the wishes of the majority.

Low Flying

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low flying exercises have taken place over (a) Pendle, (b) Ribble Valley and (c) the Yorkshire Dales national park in each year since 1990. [17847]

Mr. Soames: Although records are maintained of the total number of sorties flown in the United Kingdom low flying system, it is not possible to estimate the number of sorties flown over particular locations.

Ex Gratia Payment to Australia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which state is the recipient of the ex gratia payment expended from class I, vote 1, subhead E2 of his Department's budget. [18122]

Mr. Soames: The payment is made to Australia.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of expenditure from class I, vote 1, subhead J4 of his Department's budget. [18123]

Mr. Soames: The expenditure is broken down as follows:

Contributions towards the administrative expenses of the mutual defence co-operation agreement with the US	6,000
Contributions to the Victoria and George Cross Reunion Association	31,000

Advisory and Sales Teams

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 778-79, if he will describe the roles of the British defence advisory team and the Army sales team mentioned in his answer of 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 526 to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) and the extent to which they differ. [17129]

Mr. Freeman: The British defence advisory team is available to provide overseas Governments with on-site studies and specialist military advice on operational needs for single or multi-service roles. The army sales teams organise and conduct demonstrations, training and trials of British defence equipment in United Kingdom and overseas, and assist companies with sales promotion material and provide specialist advice.

The teams differ in as much as the BDAT provides operational advice, whereas the sales teams support foreign interest in UK defence equipment.

Nuclear Weapons Research

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the rules in respect of the Government allowing a non-nuclear state direct or indirect access to its facilities for computer simulation of nuclear testing. [17556]

Mr. Soames: Such access is not allowed under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty if it would assist the non-nuclear weapon state to acquire a nuclear weapon capability.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was (a) the number of simulated nuclear explosions which have been undertaken, (b) the number of tests on nuclear weapons components or precursors and (c) the costs contributed by the United Kingdom and United States of America respectively, of such forms of nuclear testing under the 1958 United Kingdom Mutual Defence Agreement in each of the last 15 years. [17557]

Mr. Freeman: Records of simulations and component tests carried out in the course of nuclear weapons research are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Surplus Sales

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by volume and type, the surplus (a) furniture or household items, (b) clothing, (c) plant, machinery or tools, (d) electrical goods, (e) electronic goods, (f) computer equipment, (g) ships, (h) aircraft, (i) tanks, (j) armoured vehicles, (k) artillery, (l) ammunition, (m) missiles, (n) helicopters, (o) torpedoes and (p) other items sold to acceptable foreign Governments in the last three years for which information is available; if he will identify the countries invovled; and if he will give the total receipts for each category of item. [15802]

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 27 March 1995]: Sales to foreign Governments in the last three years have been as follows:

	Number
Plant and machinery:
Tractors	4
Trailers	1
Dump trucks (medium)	3
Dump trucks (light)	3
Cranes	1
Crawlers	1
Graders	2
Caterpillar	3
	18
Ships:
Type 21 frigates	6
Type 22 frigates	4
Leander class frigates	2
Fleet tankers	2
River class minesweepers	7
Offshore patrol vessels	1
	22 Aircraft:
Jaguars	1
Jet Provost ground runners	3
Armoured Vehicles:
Scorpion CVRTs	12
Artillery:
M109s	117
Skyflash	300
BL755	50
	350 Helicopters:
Wasps	6
Lynx HAS3	3
Ammunition:
200 rounds mortars	—
10k misc. explosives	—
200k + small arms	—
56k + artillery	—
Various naval ammunition	—

The total value of sales was £206 million.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 1995, Official Report, column 77, how many meetings have taken place between representatives of his Department and Conservative hon. Members since 1 October 1994 to discuss procurement decisions; and if he will give (a) the date, (b) the subject and (c) the names of the Ministers and hon. Members attending. [17655]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 20 March 1995, Official Report, column 77.

Independent Reviews

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the independent reviews of his Department's work carried out over the last five years, stating (a) the date, (b) the subject, (c) the organisation or individuals who carried out the review, (d) the cost and (e) whether the report is classified or can be placed in the Library. [17656]

Mr. Soames: Budget-holders throughout the Ministry of Defence have delegated authority to engage external advisors, on a paid consultancy basis or otherwise, to conduct independent reviews of aspects of the Department's work. Information on such studies is not collected centrally, and the details requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In addition, the National Audit Office carries out value for money studies of the Ministry of Defence's work as part of its statutory duties. Reports that have been published by the NAO are available in the Library of the House.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 505, if he will give a breakdown of the costs of keeping overseas staff employed by the Defence Export Services Organisation, for each post; and to what entertainment allowances these staff are entitled. [17657]

Mr. Freeman: Further to my answer of 27 March, details of the entertainment allocations for posts overseas for FY 1994–95 are as follows:

Riyadh: £2,000
Kuwait: £2,000
New Delhi: £2,000
Bangkok: £3,000
Kuala Lumpur: £7,000
Jakarta: £4,000
Canberra: £4,500
Seoul: £5,000
Ankara £4,000

There is no separate entertainment allocation for disposals sales staff in Germany.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 505, if he will list the duties of overseas staff employed by the Defence Export Services Organisation; and if he will make a statement. [17658]

Mr. Freeman: The duties of the defence supply staff in the DESO offices in Riyadh, Kuwait, New Delhi, Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur, Jakarta, Canberra, Seoul and Ankara are to provide local advice and support to British defence equipment manufacturers. The Disposals Sales Agency staff in Germany receive, market, arrange for sale and issue surplus MOD equipment locally.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials have left the Defence Services Organisation to join defence or defence-related companies in each of the last 10 years for which information is available; and if he will list the companies involved and the numbers joining each company. [17659]

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available for the period before January 1990. Since then, 13 members of the Defence Export Services Organisation have made business appointment applications. It is not know whether the appointments were taken up.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contact the Defence Export Services Organisation had with Mr. Stephen Adolphus Kock between 1985 to 1991 concerning defence sales to (a) Saudi Arabia, (b) Iran, (c) Iraq, (d) Kuwait, (e) the United Arab Emirates and (f) Oman. [18244]

Mr. Freeman: The DESO is not aware of any record of contact with Mr. Kock concerning exports of defence equipment to the countries listed.

Defence Clothing and Textile Agency

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed by the Defence Clothing and Textile Agency; what is its annual budget; and what are its terms of reference. [18083]

Mr. Soames: The number of staff employed at present in the Defence Clothing and Textile Agency is 447, and its annual budget for financial year 1994–95 was £111.337 million. Further information can be found in the organisation's corporate plan, business plan and framework document, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Western European Armaments Group

Dr. Clark: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to join the Western European Armaments Group; and what assessment he has made of the advantages membership would create for Britain. [17539]

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The title of the Western European Armaments Group was adopted following the transfer of the functions of the former Independent European Programme Group to the Western European Union in December 1992. The United Kingdom has been a member of the group since its establishment in 1976. The group is the main forum for European co-operation in research, development and production of defence equipment and our membership allows us to participate in the development of the European defence equipment market.

Training Exercises (Safety)

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the regulations governing safety officers involved in training under battlefield conditions using live ammunition. [18293]

Mr. Soames: The qualifications required to allow officers and NCOs to conduct such training are subject to continual review and are revised where necessary. The qualifications held by individual officers and NCOs are reviewed annually by commanding officers.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the use of lasers instead of live ammunition during training exercises. [18292]

Mr. Soames: My Department is seeking to introduce lasers into training exercises where it is practicable to do so. The Army is currently using direct fire weapon effects simulators, which employ eye-safe lasers in order to provide realistic two-sided manoeuvre training, known as tactical engagement simulation. This type of training has already commenced on Salisbury plain and is to be introduced at Suffield Canada and a smaller work-up training site in Germany.

Deaths and Injuries (Information)

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the provision of information to families of service personnel injured or killed in (a) war zones and (b) peacetime training exercises; and if he will make a statement. [18291]

Mr. Soames: It is my Department's policy to inform the next of kin of members of the armed forces who are killed or injured in the course of their duty as quickly and as fully as possible of the undisputed facts. Since December 1992, in recognition of the special position of next of kin, service board of inquiry reports have been made available to the nominated next of kin of deceased service personnel, or to the individual in cases of serious permanent injury, should they so request, subject only to the essential minimum of security requirements. No distinction is made between whether the death or injury occurs in a war zone or on a peacetime training exercise.

Operational Aircraft Requirement

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft are available to the RAF for operational use; and if he will specify the total number of aircraft required by the RAF. [18295]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to annex D of the Statement of the Defence Estimates 1994, Cm 2550, which sets out the strength of the Royal Air Force as at 1 April 1994. New figures will be included in this year's publication.

Tornado Aircraft, Coningsby

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornados based at RAF Coningsby have recently been grounded; and if he will specify the reasons for the grounding of the Tornados; which company is responsible for the maintenance of the Tornados; what investigation has been carried out into the responsibility for the damage; what is the total cost to repair the damage; who is financially responsible for paying for these repairs; and if he will make a statement. [18294]

Mr. Soames: Two Tornado F3s from RAF Coningsby, taking part in NATO Exercise Strong Resolve between 20 February and 10 March, were suspected of receiving contaminated fuel from a VC10 tanker during air-to-air refuelling. The aircraft were grounded for four hours each on 6 March as a precautionary measure; no contamination was found and there was no damage to the aircraft.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will cease passing logistical, intelligence and surveillance information to the Turkish armed forces following their invasion of northern Iraq. [18305]

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty's Government give no support to the Turkish armed forces which assists their operations in northern Iraq.

Old Sarum Airfield

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the registered office and directors of the companies which hold the lease on Old Sarum airfield, namely Blanefield Investments NV and Old Sarum Park Properties Limited. [18309]

Mr. Soames: My Department does not hold any details of the registered office or directors of Blanefield Investments NV as dealings with that company in respect of the lease of Old Sarum airfield have been conducted through the company's appointed legal representatives. The registered office of Old Sarum Park Properties is Old Sarum airfield, Salisbury, Wiltshire. No details of the directors of that company are recorded by the Department in respect of the lease at the airfield.

Territorial Army Centre, Newbury

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Territorial Army will stop using the TA centre, St. Michael's road, Newbury. [18250]

Mr. Soames: Although we expect that the Territorial Army will no longer require the St. Michael's road centre after the amalgamation of the 1st and 2nd battalions of the Wessex Regiment in October, an exact date has yet to be decided.

Service Widows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the annual cost of paying the widows of ex-service men a pension of half the rate of their late husband's, regardless of their marital status, income or capital resources. [18160]

Mr. Soames: The armed forces pension scheme already provides a pension for eligible widows of former service men at half the rate of their late husbands'. This provision was introduced in 1973. Prior to that date, service widows' pensions were assessed at one third of the late husband's pension. The total cost of bringing all widows' pensions in issue at present up to the half rate would be around £27 million per year. In common with other public service occupational schemes, a widow's pension ceases on remarriage. There is, however, discretion to restore the original pension if the subsequent marriage has come to an end and the widow is financially worse off as a result. We estimate that the annual cost of continuing to pay pensions to service widows who remarry would be around £5 million.

Airwork Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what change there has been in the probationary status of Airwork Ltd. with respect to bids and tenders for aircraft maintenance work located at RAF St. Athan and its listing as a defence contractor requiring special attention; and if he will make a statement. [18419]

Mr. Freeman: As a result of a breach of contract by Airwork, the contract was terminated by the Department in May 1993. Subsequently, BAe Warton was contracted to repair the aircraft and a claim for damages is being pursued against Bricom, parent company of Airwork at the time of the breach.

In November 1993 Airwork's business was acquired by Shorts Brothers, although liability for breach of contract remains with Bricom under the conditions of sale. As a result of the breach Airwork Ltd. was placed on the CRSA list—contractors requiring special attention—meaning that they were considered to be significantly in breach of their contractual requirements, that their response in the form of corrective actions was being formally monitored and that consideration would be given to the implications for existing contracts and for new contract proposals.

The support services division of Shorts Brothers Plc, formerly Airwork, is included on the CRSA list. Listed companies will not automatically be disqualified from bidding for MOD work; each case is treated on its merits. The essential criterion is the relationship between the cause of the breach and the work for which the company wishes to be considered.

Written Answers to Questions

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 630, if he will give such information on water and sewerage charges paid by his Department, as can be provided without disproportionate costs. [15935]

Mr. Jack: As my reply on 15 March said, there is currently no centrally held record of payments made on water and sewerage charges paid by the Department. Under decentralised budgets, responsibility of these matters rests with well over 100 accommodation managers throughout the estate, who are dealing with a diverse range of property occupation. There would be disproportionate costs involved in attempting to collect this information now.

The Department is working on establishing a central database for water, and other types of charges, but this will not be fully effective until after 1994–95.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 499, regarding calves loaded at Brightlingsea on 3 March, what steps he has taken to assure himself that all calves were individually fed in the period stated while they were still in the vehicles. [17127]

Mrs. Browning: There was only one lorry carrying calves for that sailing. It was not loaded to its full capacity, and so the calves could be fed while on board the vehicle. The calves were individually bucket fed while the lorry was waiting at the port, and this was carried out satisfactorily, according to the report of the veterinary office who was present.

I should make clear, with apologies, that the answer I gave on 14 March about livestock exported from Brightlingsea on 3 March was unfortunately corrupted in transmission and should have read:

> "I understand that the journey of the 194 calves began at 05.30 hours from premises in Kent. The lorry carrying calves arrived at a lairage near Harwich shortly after 10.00 hours where it waited until convoyed to the port, arriving at about 14.00 hours. The calves were fed abroad the lorry between 18.00 hours and 19.50 hours. The vessel berthed at 23.10 hours an the calves were loaded from 23.30 hours fed immediately. All were aboard by 23.45 hours. Sheep were loaded between 23.45 and 01.20 hours."

The two final paragraphs which were mistakenly added to the above-mentioned reply ought to have been included instead in my reply of 14 March to the hon. Member about livestock exported from Shoreham port on 6 March—column 499. This latter reply should have read:

> "A veterinary officer was at the port awaiting the arrival of six trucks containing calves. In the event, a demonstration prevented two livestock lorries already on their way to Shoreham from reaching the port. I understand that these lorries returned with the calves to the premises of origin in Oxfordshire. Officials were satisfied that all the animals could be returned to the home premises within the 15-hour limit by which time the animals would have had to be fed and rested.
> The other four livestock lorries were at local lairages ready to load calves already resting there. In the circumstances, loading of those animals for Shoreham did not even begin.
> Journey plans had been scrutinised by officials before the proposed export journeys started and were satisfactory."

Rabies

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dogs have developed rabies in quarantine during a 20-year period; how many of these had valid certificates of vaccination against rabies; and which countries they came from. [17200]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Two dogs have developed rabies in quarantine in the last 20 years—an Irish wolfhound imported from the USA in 1983 and a Welsh terrier cross imported from Zambia in 1990. The Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and other Mammals) Order 1974 requires all dogs to be vaccinated against rabies on entry into quarantine to prevent infection from being contracted within the premises if another animal should develop rabies. There is no requirement for animals to have been vaccinated prior to entry into quarantine and therefore no information is held on whether they hold valid certificates of vaccination.

Baby Milk

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policy considerations underlay his decision to amend the draft version of the United Kingdom regulations on advertising of baby milk in relation to the dissemination of information and controls on the advertising of brand name baby milk; and what representations he has received for and against his amendments. [17484]

Mrs. Browning: In deciding the final form of the regulations, Ministers gave heed to the Government's deregulation policy of implementing the minimum requirements of EC legislation, unless there are very good reasons for going beyond them.

Since the regulations were made and laid before the House, Ministers have received a large number of representations objecting, in particular, to the advertising controls on infant formulae. Not unexpectedly, only a few representations have been received from those content with the regulations.

Meat Imports

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers the United Kingdom has to sustain its ban on the import of meat products from animals reared using growth hormones if this is ruled to be illegal under GATT. [17475]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 April 1995]: The ban to which the hon. Member refers results from a European regulation. The UK voted against its adoption on the grounds that it was not justified scientifically. The legality of the ban has not so far been tested in the GATT. Were there to be a successful challenge we should, in conjunction with our EU partners, need to respond appropriately under the rules of the World Trade Organisation on the settlement of disputes.

Holderness Coast

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultation he has held with English Nature, the Countryside Commission, the National Rivers Authority and Holderness borough council over proposals to draw up a coastal protection scheme for the Holderness coast. [17844]

Mrs. Browning: Under the provisions of the Coast Protection Act 1949, coast protection authorities, such as Holderness borough council, must obtain the Ministry's approval for capital works intended to protect the coast against erosion. The Ministry is in regular contact with such authorities and requires them to consult other relevant bodies, including the National Rivers Authority, English Nature and the Countryside Commission, on proposed works. My right hon. Friend the Minister met a delegation from the council, led by the hon. Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townend), to discuss Holderness coastal defence issues on 7 February.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment has been made of the potential impact of the proposed trial of a submerged tyre bank off Dimlington coast, Holdersness on sites of special scientific interest at Dimlington cliff and Spurn point; and if a licence will be granted for a trial; [17843]

(2) If Sir William Halcrow and Partners have published the results of its environmental study into the consequences of a trial of a submerged tyre bank off the Dimlington coast, Holderness. [17842]

Mr. Jack: An application has been received under part 11 of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 from Humberside county council for a licence to deposit rubber rocks made from tyres in a trial offshore reef to test the effectiveness of such structures in contributing to the protection of the Humberside coast. The council has been told that a full environmental assessment will be required in support of the application and we understand this is currently being prepared by Halcrow and Partners. Publication of the study is a matter for the council.

The Ministry will wish to study this assessment and consult other interested parties before deciding whether or not to issue a licence.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an assessment of the consequences, both for the British fishing industry and other interests, if the United Kingdom withdraw from the common fisheries policy; and if he will make a statement. [17970]

Mr. Jack: The Government's views on the idea that the UK might withdraw from the common fisheries policy have been made clear to the House on a number of occasions. These include already this year, for example, the fisheries debate on 18 January, oral answers on 23 March, and three private notice questions, on 10 January and 13 and 28 March.

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of Aujeszky's disease were reported in each year since 1985. [17820]

Mrs. Browning: The number of confirmed outbreaks of Aujeszky's disease in England for the period in question is as follows:

Year	Number of outbreaks
1985	12
1986	5
1987	6
1988	5
1989	5
1990–1995	Nil

Food Poisoning

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the change in the occurrence of food poisoning which can be attributed to the slaughter and handling of meat at abattoirs since the introduction of the EC meat hygiene regulations in 1992. [17953]

Mrs. Browning: A number of organisms, such as escherichia coli 0157:H7, some salmonella serotypes and listeria monocytogenes have been implicated in food poisoning incidents associated with the consumption of meat and meat products. In most cases of this kind, it is not possible to trace the meat back to the abattoir of origin.

Thorough cooking will destroy most, if not all, pathogenic micro-organisms, but steps must be taken at every stage of production to limit the risk of contamination of the unprocessed product because of the hazards associated with cross-infection and light cooking. The most appropriate point to address the problem of contamination with pathogenic organisms is in the slaughter hall, a critical control point in the chain of production where a number of conditions of animal and public health significance can be detected.

The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 have improved hygiene standards generally in slaughterhouses and other licensed fresh meat premises but it is not possible to assess whether the occurrence of food poisoning has changed as a result of their introduction.

Fish Species

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the fish species in United Kingdom waters and in the North Atlantic that (a) have been fished out and (b) are in danger of being fished out. [17854]

Mr. Jack: I am not aware that there are any fish species in waters around the United Kingdom or in the north Atlantic which are biologically extinguished or likely to be so. However, on the basis of 1994 scientific assessments, 37 per cent. of commercial fish stocks around the United Kingdom are at or below minimum biologically acceptable levels, that is, recruitment of young fish is insufficient to maintain the size of the stock at current levels. These stocks are:

North Sea—cod, saithe, plaice, mackerel;
Eastern Channel—cod, whiting, plaice;
Western Channel—sole;
Bristol Channel—cod, sole, plaice;
Western waters—hake, mackerel;
Irish Sea—cod, whiting, sole;
West of Scotland—cod, haddock, saithe, whiting, Clyde herring

In the north Atlantic, the following stocks are insufficiently prevalent to permit a viable commercial fishery:

East and West Greenland—offshore cod;
Faroes—bank cod;

A fishing moratorium applies within the regulatory area of the North-west Atlantic Fisheries Organisation to the following:

American plaice, yellowtail flounder, witch, capelin; cod, in NAFO division 3NO.

Blue Tongue

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of Blue Tongue were reported in each year since 1980. [17817]

Mrs. Browning: No case of Blue Tongue has ever been reported in England.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food what alternatives were considered to the Meat Hygiene Service during its development. [18408]

Mrs. Browning: A review of the options for meat hygiene enforcement by a MAFF-Department of Health study team in 1991 considered:

enhancement of local authority enforcement, central enforcement by the State Veterinary Service, transferring enforcement to a separate body, and contracting out.

The possibilities of privatisation or of contracting out were further considered as part of the process of establishing the Meat Hygiene Service as an agency of this Department.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister in consultations on the Environment Bill. [18650]

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend the Minister is the nominated green Minister for MAFF. This reflects the importance we attach to the consideration of environmental implications across the whole range of MAFF policies. Progress on MAFF's environmental performance is reported annually in departmental reports—Cm 2803—and in the United Kingdom's annual report "This Common Inheritance"—CM 2822. Copies of both are in the Library of the House.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of land were set aside under the arable area payments scheme in each region of England in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and what is the estimate of the number of hectares of land that will be set aside in each region in 1995–96. [18659]

Mr. Waldegrave: The area of land set-aside under the arable area payments scheme in each region in England in 1993–94 is shown in the table below. Equivalent figures for 1994–95 are not yet available and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as they are. It is still too early to estimate the number of hectares that have been set aside in 1995–96 as farmers do not have to submit their integrated administration and control system claims until 15 May.

Areas set-aside in 1993–94 (hectares)

	Number
Wessex	32,323
Anglia	131,930
Northern	16,674
North Mercia	21,385
South West	10,092
North East	75,643
East Midlands	96,168
South East	73,183
South Mercia	35,467

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the total cost of payments for (a) set-aside and (b) in total under the arable area payments scheme in each region of England in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and what is estimate of the total cost of payments in each region of England in 1995–96. [18635]

Mr. Waldegrave: The total of payments claimed for set-aside and arable area payments for regions of England for 1993–94 is shown below. The total amount paid will have been slightly lower because of reductions made for various reasons. However, since such reductions have to be calculated on the basis of the total claim, which may include land in more than one region, it is not possible to give the total amounts paid on a regional basis. The equivalent figures for 1994–95 are not yet available and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as they are. It is not yet possible to estimate the cost of payments in each region for 1995–96 as integrated administration and control system claims do not have to be submitted by farmers until 15 May.

Cost of set-aside and arable payments in 1993–94

	Set-aside £	Total AAPS £
Wessex	8,625,448	41,258,638
Anglia	35,205,471	175,758,954
Northern	4,450,178	22,587,760
North Mercia	5,706,655	275,179,904
South West	2,693,018	12,115,126
North East	20,185,548	101,011,554
East Midlands	25,662,373	136,205,244
South East	19,528,730	104,344,814
South Mercia	9,464,455	49,928,317

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many claims were made for in England (1) for set-aside and (2) in total under the arable area payments scheme in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95 of (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) between £5,001 and £10,000, (c) between £10,001 and £15,000, (d) between £15,001 and £20,000, (e) between £20,001 and £25,000, (f) between £25,001 and £50,000, (g) between £50,001 and £75,000, (h) between £75,001 and £100,000, (i) between £100,001 and £150,000, (j) between £50,001 and £200,000, (k) between £200,001 and £1,000,000 and (l) over £1,000,000; and what is his latest estimate of the number of claims that will be made in 1995–96 in each value band. [18634]

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of claims made in England for set-aside and in total under the arable area payments scheme in England in 1993–94 were £26,283 and 45,774 respectively and in 1994–95 were 29,261 and 46,920.

The distribution of payments for 1993–94 is only available in the form set out below. Similar figures for 1994–95 are not yet available as the final oilseed payments for the year are still being made. It is too early to estimate the value of claims for 1995–96 as IACS claims do not have to be submitted by farmers until May 15.

Total payments in England banded by size of payment

Size band	Number of payments
Up to £4,999	21,345
From £5,000 to £9,999	6,577
From £10,000 to £24,999	9,712
From £25,000 to £49,999	5,164
From £50,000 to £99,999	2,325
From £100,000 to £249,999	599
From £250,000 to £499,999	45
From £500,000 upward	[1]7
Total	45,774

[1] It is not possible to identify separately the number of payments above £1,000,000 for reasons of confidentiality.

Disabled People

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18593]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry, including its agencies, takes its responsibilities in the area of equal opportunities seriously and aims to respond as far as reasonably possible to the needs of disabled members of the public and staff.

In the area of access, the Ministry has for several years been reviewing its estate and improving the accessibility of the buildings it occupies. A survey of all staff in 1993 showed where they thought additional measures were necessary. Funds have now been set aside for a further three-year programme, starting with a full survey of the estate to indicate where further improvements can be made.

Badger Setts (Paignton Zoo)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badger setts there are known to be in the boundaries of Paignton zoo; how many of these have been interfered with; how many have received a licence to be interfered with; for what reasons the licences were issued; and if he will make a statement. [18636]

Mrs. Browning: I will write to the hon. Member once ADAS, the Ministry's wildlife adviser, has completed a site visit.

Central Veterinary Laboratory

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what targets have been set for the Central Veterinary Laboratory in 1995–96. [19214]

Mr. Waldegrave: I have set the Central Veterinary Laboratory the following strategic performance targets for 1995–96:

Financial Performance—full cost recovery for all Central Veterinary Laboratory services

Efficiency: an overall efficiency gain of 2.5 per cent.

Service Delivery: 85 per cent. of ROAME R and D milestones achieved

Service quality: achievement of a satisfactory report from a Visiting Group

Achievement of laboratory accreditation for Radiochemistry Unit

Details of performance in 1994-295 will be set out in the agency's annual report and accounts to be published during July 1995.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has completed the review of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate; and if he will make a statement. [19210]

Mr. Waldegrave: The review of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate has now been completed. This has concluded that the VMD should continue to operate as an executive agency.

An independent evaluation of the VMD was carried out by external management consultants. As well as assessing the VMD's performance this also considered the effects of agency status on both the VMD and core Department. Overall, the study concluded that the VMD had made significant progress since its launch as an agency in 1990. There were, of course, some areas for improvement and lessons to be learnt for both the agency and the Department. I have placed a summary of the evaluation's main recommendations, and the management response, together with a copy of the VMD's revised framework document in the Libraries of both Houses.

EMPLOYMENT

Service Sector Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what comparisons he has made on the basis of purchasing power parity between the living standard of the average service industry worker in the United Kingdom and that of his EU counterparts. [15930]

Mr. Oppenheim: For service sectors where information is available, gross pay in the UK is higher than in Western Germany, France, Belgium and the Netherlands—once the cost of living has been taken into account.

Manual Worker's Pay

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in real take-home pay for manual workers between (a) 1973–74 and 1978–79 and (b) 1978–79 and 1993–94. [18425]

Mr. Oppenehim: Real take-home pay for a single man at the lowest 10 per cent. of the earnings distribution fell by 1 per cent. between 1973–74 and 1978–79 and increased by 23 per cent. between 1978–79 and 1993–94.

Job Losses

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs were lost in each region, broken down by gender, over the last 12 months for the occupational categories (a) managerial and administrative, (b) professional, (c) associate professional and technical, (d) clerical and secretarial, (e) craft and related, (f) personal and protective service, (g) sales (h) plant and machine operatives and (i) other. [18421]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Information is available only for the net change in jobs. This can be obtained from the labour force survey Quantime service available in the Library.

Remploy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for all standard employment regions the total number of Remploy units and the number of people employed in them for the last three favourable years. [16758]

Miss Widddecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the total number of Remploy units and the number of people employed in for the last three years.

The information in the following list gives Remploy's estimates, by Employment Service Region, of the numbers of severely disabled people employed in their factories as at end March for the last three years. It does not include those on the Interwork programme.

Region	Year	Number of severely disabled people	Number of units
East Midlands	1992	456	7
	1993	420	8
	1994	400	8
North East	1992	862	8
	1993	796	8
	1994	770	8
North West	1992	1,552	18
	1993	1,465	18
	1994	1,473	19
Scotland	1992	915	10
	1993	854	10
	1994	850	10
South East	1992	789	10
	1993	748	10
	1994	752	10
South West	1992	583	9
	1993	551	9
	1994	569	9
Wales	1992	1,288	14
	1993	1,200	14
	1994	1,176	15
West Midlands	1992	607	5
	1993	579	6
	1994	568	6
Yorkshire and Humberside	1992	940	14
	1993	907	14
	1994	903	14

I hope this is helpful.

Special Contracts and Priority Suppliers Scheme

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the workings of the special contracts arrangements and priority suppliers scheme; and if he will make a statement. [16759]

Miss Widdecombe: I have received representations from a range of people and organisations, including correspondence from hon. Members.

Occupational Health

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will indicate the measures that his Department undertakes to address occupational health; and if he will make a statement. [18255]

Mr. Oppenheim: Much of the Health and Safety Executive's everyday activity, such as modernising the framework of health and safety law, inspection of workplaces, provision of advice and formal enforcement action, addresses occupational health issues and the reduction of levels of occupational ill health. Details are contained in the Health and Safety Commission's plans of work and annual reports. The plan of work for 1995–96 will be published on 21 April and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Additionally, the HSE is giving priority in 1995 to implementing a programme of action based on the conclusions of its recent strategic review of the 10 main occupational health risks: toxic substances, biohazards, noise, vibration, ionising and non-ionising radiation, manual handling, upper limb disorders, sick building syndrome and stress. Action includes obtaining better information on the scale and pattern of ill health; commissioning further research, for example on prevention techniques; provision of practical guidance and publicity and inspection campaigns.

In May 1995, the HSE will be launching a major new three to four-year campaign, "Good Health is Good Business", to help to improve employers' management of health risks. The first year will focus in particular on noise, respiratory sensitisers and musculoskeletal risks.

Minimum Wage (Women)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet the Equal Opportunities Commission to consider its research findings on the effect of women of the introduction of a minimum wage. [18773]

Miss Widdecombe: I have no plans to do so.

Transfers and Redundancies

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to amend the legislation concerning consultation with employees' representatives about collective redundancies and transfers of undertakings; and if he will make a statement. [18972]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Employment Department is seeking views from a range of organisations on a proposal to amend the legislation concerning an employer's duty to provide information to, and to consult, representatives of employees about proposed redundancies and business transfers. A copy of the proposal has been placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Palestinian National Authority

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals were made by the Prime Minister during his recent visit to extend material and technical aid to the Palestinian national authority. [15535]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 14 March, Official Report, column 476.

Gaza Airport and Port

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statements were made by the recent British delegation to Gaza about the willingness of Britain to be involved in building Gaza airport and port. [15536]

Mr. Baldry: No statements on this issue were made by representatives of Her Majesty's Government. I understand that a number of British firms expressed interest in these projects.

International Development Association

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he plans to ensure that contributions to IDA-11 will reduce poverty. [15584]

Mr. Baldry: We have already made clear in the on-going IDA-11 negotiations that we look to the World bank to strengthen the effectiveness of its programmes, including implementation of its poverty reduction strategy. I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 7 and 13 March, Official Report, columns 130–31, and 366–67.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals exist at British or international level for the reintroduction of mine clearing operations in Somaliland. [17824]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 February 1995, columns 488–89. The situation is unchanged.

South African Elections

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria were used to decide the delegation sent to monitor the 1994 South African elections; and if he will make a statement. [18139]

Mr. Baldry: Britain provided a total of 70 election observers under the auspices of the United Nations and European Union observer missions. The main criteria for the selection of individuals was that they should have experience and professional skills relevant to the running of elections.

Aid for Trade Projects

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects funded, and the sums allocated, by the £34.5 million returned to the aid budget in 1994–95 in recompense for the illegal use of the money to fund the Pergau dam and three other aid for trade provision projects. [18211]

Mr. Baldry: Spending on these four projects for 1994–95 was estimated to be £32.016 million. This was allocated as part of a wider reallocation of resources at the time of the spring supplementary estimate. The availability of these funds effectively allowed:

i. further spending on country programmes (£13.825 million)—principally for additional programme aid for Malawi, mine clearance in Cambodia and a range of know how fund projects in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union;

ii. additional spending on emergency and refugee relief (£12.191 million)—principally of work in Bosnia, Rwanda and Chechyna; and

iii. additional funding (£6 million)—principally for research and primary health care work in developing countries through the WHO and other international health organisations.

Natural Resources Institute

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the restructuring of the Natural Resources Institute;

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the restructuring of the Natural Resources Institute.

Mr. Baldry: Against the background of changes in the nature and level of demand for the NRI's services, we have put in hand a restructuring programme. The result will be a smaller institute which focuses on the NRI's interdisciplinary strengths in adaptive research and related development services. The NRI management envisage an organisation of around 360 professional and administrative staff, which will mean a reduction of present staffing level by 140. We aim to achieve the reduction in staffing by voluntary means.

The restructured institute will continue to play a major role in Britain's programme of aid for the natural resources sector in developing countries. It will do so as a supplier of services in its own right and as a manager of resources from the available science base. The NRI's expertise is increasingly sought by outside clients in the development aid community. The institute will be strongly encouraged to expand this aspect of its activities.

WALES

"D" Plates

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to amend the law relating to the display of "D" plates by learner drivers in Wales. [19243]

Mr. Richards: The Government are considering amending the Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulations 1987 to permit learner drivers in Wales to display "D" plates in preference to "L" plates if they wish. A consultation document seeking the views of the public and organisations with an interest in this matter is being issued today and a copy has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

School Pupils

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the full programme of action to raise the achievement of pupils in schools in Wales promised in "People and Prosperity: An Agenda for Action in Wales". [19244]

Mr. Redwood: I intend to publish this document on Thursday 6 April. The text is entitled "A Bright Future: Getting the Best for Every Pupil at School in Wales". Among other things, it follows-up material in "People and Prosperity: An Agenda for Action in Wales". Taken as a whole, this initiative will be directly relevant to primary and secondary schools. It includes a consultation on a specific target for attainment in the core subjects of the national curriculum. The proposal is that, by 2000, at least half of all individual 15-year-olds should get an A to C grade in each of GCSE mathematics, science, English or Welsh, first language. Responses are sought by the end of June and the final target will be published in the autumn. I have made arrangements for copies of the text to be placed in the Library of the House.

Lydia Owens

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received a copy of the report of the inquiry team which investigated the abduction of Lydia Owens from Glan Clwyd hospital and if he will make a statement. [19245]

Mr. Richards: The inquiry team set up by Glan Clwyd NHS trust has completed its report and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. I am satisfied that the circumstances have been thoroughly investigated and the board of the trust has accepted the recommendations, which are being implemented. All hospitals are reviewing their security arrangements and the chairman of the Glan Clwyd NHS trust has discussed the recommendations with the chairmen of other NHS trusts in Wales so that they can implement them where appropriate.

Smoking

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what initiatives the Welsh Office is taking to encourage people to stop smoking; and if he will make a statement; [16799]

(2) what is the budget allocated for publicity to educate the public about the effects of smoking in the current year; and if he will make a statement. [16774]

Mr. Richards: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children have received statements for special educational needs in each of the counties in Wales in each year from 1980 to the present time. [16837]

Mr. Richards: Estimates of the number of children in each county in Wales for whom statements of special educational needs were made for the first time, for each year since 1987, are shown in the following table. Data for earlier years are not available on the same basis. Totals for Wales shown in the table reflect the county estimates and in respect of 1987 and 1988 should be substituted for those I gave the hon. Member in my reply of 17 March, Official Report, column 766.

Errors in the return to the Welsh Office from one county have been identified in the meantime.

Carbon Fibre Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the sources of carbon fibre pollution in Wales. [17511]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Carbon fibre is an inorganic material used in the manufacture of a wide range of products including aircraft, high-performance cars and sports equipment. It is normally used, in small quantities, as a strengthening material. The World Health Organisation has indicated that the potential health risk from carbon fibre pollution in the general environment is very low.

County Council Smallholdings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many county council farm tenancies there are in each of the counties of Wales (a) at present and (b) in 1979; and if he will make a statement. [17395]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Number of Tenancies (position as at 31 March)

	1979	1994
Clwyd	186	154
Dyfed	144	163
Gwent	120	89
Gwynedd	184	175
Mid Glamorgan	29	4
Powys	261	219
South Glamorgan	72	35
West Glamorgan	7	2

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estimated number of acres of council farm tenancies in the proposed new local authorities based on the former Clwyd county council; and if he will make a statement. [17398]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 31 March 1994, Clwyd county council let 3,640 hectares of land as smallholdings. It is not possible to estimate the number of hectares of council farm tenancies falling within each individual new local authority. It is the Government's intention that the smallholdings should be transferred to the new authorities.

General Practitioners

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number and percentage of general practitioner practices in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney and (c) Mid Glamorgan which have established patient participation groups. [17387]

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Rowlands : To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner trainees there are currently in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney and (c) Mid Glamorgan. [17389]

Mr. Richards: The numbers of GP trainees currently engaged in the general practice component of their training are as follows:

	Number
Rhymney	1
Merthyr	0
Ogwr	13
Rhondda/Taff	8
Total in Mid Glamorgan	22

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of general practitioner practices in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney and (c) Mid Glamorgan that have established the programmes and standards listed in section 6.2 of the Mid Glamorgan family health services authority's business plan 1995–96. [17391]

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

This is a local management issue for the Mid Glamorgan family health services authority.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number and percentage of general practitioner practices in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney and (c) in Mid Glamorgan which have employed nurses. [17386]

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

The number of practice nurses employed in Mid Glamorgan at 1 April 1994 was 169—whole-time equivalent 121.5.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number and percentage of United Kingdom-trained general practitioners in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) Rhymney and (c) Mid Glamorgan. [17388]

Mr. Richards: This information is not readily available.

The number of unrestricted principals at 1 April 1994 in Mid Glamorgan was 303.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of whether family health services authorities' procedures are adequate in assisting and advising families who believe that a general practitioner has been negligent in his care of a patient belonging to that family; and if he will make a statement. [18099]

Mr. Richards: Negligence is a matter for the courts; it is not something on which FHSAs would offer advice.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of general practitioner practices in (a) Alyn and Deeside and (b) Clwyd that have established patient participation groups; and if he will make a statement. [18101]

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received concerning (a) nurses' pay (b) ambulance staff pay and (c) radiographers' pay; and if he will make a statement. [17397]

Mr. Richards: I have received 31 representations, including a petition, on nurses' pay and two representations specifically about radiographers' pay. I have not received any regarding the pay of ambulance staff.

Respite Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take to deliver more respite care in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17401]

Mr. Richards: It is for local authorities, health authorities and GP fundholders to determine and meet the need for respite care in their areas.

Local authorities in Wales will receive £124.4 million in 1995–96 for community care, including respite care. It is for those authorities to decide how best to use this money to meet the needs of their local populations.

The recent Welsh Office guidance on NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs—WHC(95)7, WOC16/95—has reiterated that health authorities and GP fundholders have important responsibilities too, in arranging and funding respite health care. Working with local authorities, health authorities have been asked to set out by April 1996 the arrangements they will make for this.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who advises him on sustainable development policy issues pertaining to Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17482]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice on sustainable development matters is available to my right hon. Friend from a range of sources. These include in particular the Welsh Office, the Government panel on sustainable development, and the UK round table.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to establish a Welsh advisory group on sustainable development along the lines of that set up by the Secretary of State for Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [17497]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) by my right hon. Friend on 17 March 1995, Official Report, column 770.

Registered Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of children in (a) playgroups and (b) toddler groups in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17400]

Mr. Richards: Information on the numbers of children in playgroups and toddler groups is not held centrally. The available information relates to the number of places in registered playgroups for children aged from two years and six months and is given in the following table:

Number of places available in registered playgroups as at 31 March 1994

Local Authority	Places
Clwyd	5,131
Dyfed	3,089
Gwent	3,063
Gwynedd	3,348
Mid Glamorgan	3,928
Powys	1,513
South Glamorgan	4,093
West Glamorgan	1,318
Total	25,483

Rheumatology Services

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if a consultant has yet been found for the proposed rheumatology service for Gwent; and if he will make a statement. [17420]

Mr. Richards: It is the responsibility of health authorities and trusts to identify health needs and corresponding staff requirements; therefore, this information is not held centrally.

Mid Glamorgan Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to meet the underfunding identified in Mid Glamorgan family health services authority's business plan 1995–96. [17390]

Mr. Richards: None. For 1995–96, the Mid Glamorgan FHSA has received its weighted capitation share of administration funding and cash increase of 7.9 per cent. for its cash-limited general medical services. The average increase for FHSAs in Wales was 6 per cent.

Low Flying

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations have been received by his Department from the Celtic League regarding the dangers posed by toxic pollution fall-out arising from crashes of RAF aircraft on low flying exercises in Wales. [17520]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None; although I understand the Celtic League has written to the Ministry of Defence about this.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18530]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18548]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to an hon. or right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18550]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18549]

(5) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer written 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18547]

(6) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior officials of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each years since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18529]

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Complaints

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the procedures of medical complaints and assess whether they are carried out speedily enough; and if he will make a statement. [18100]

Mr. Richards: All NHS complaints procedures were reviewed by the committee chaired by Professor Alan Wilson, whose report "Being Heard" was published in May 1994. The Government's response was announced on 21 March and included targets of two working days and four weeks for initial and full responses to complaints made at stage 1 of the new system. Deadlines for complaints made at stage 2 will be worked out in discussion with interested parties.

Dental Services

Mr Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many dental practices taking new NHS patients there were in 1992 in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement; [18225]

(2) how many dental practices there are in Dyfed taking new NHS patients; and if he will make a statement; [18223]

(3) how many dental practices taking new NHS patients there were in 1992 in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement; [18226]

(4) how many dental practices there were taking new NHS patients in Powys in 1993; and if he will make a statement; [18230]

(5) how many dental practices there are in the county of West Glamorgan currently taking new NHS patients; and if he will make a statement. [18224]

Mr. Richards: The information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Family health services authorities are best placed to provide information on local availability of NHS general dental services, and to provide advice and assistance to any unregistered patient who experiences difficulty in finding a dentist willing to accept them under NHS arrangements.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental practitioners with fewer than two years' post-qualification experience there are in the county of Clwyd; and if he will make a statement [18229]

Mr. Richards: According to information supplied by the family health services authority, there are six dentists in Clwyd who have less than two years' post-qualification experience.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental practices there are in (a) the county of Dyfed and (b) Clwyd. [18228]

Mr. Richards: Information on the number of dental practices is not available centrally. However, at 31 December 1994, there were 104 and 119 general dental practitioners practising in Dyfed FHSA and Clwyd FHSA respectively. Dentists who work in more than one FHSA have been counted in the FHSA where they perform most work.

Teaching Posts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the number of teachers in Wales who cannot find permanent posts. [18105]

Mr. Richards: Information about teachers seeking permanent posts is not available. The appointment of teachers is entirely a matter for local education authorities and schools. The overwhelming majority of full-time teachers have permanent contracts.

Remploy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total number of Remploy units and number working in them for each county and for Wales as a whole during the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [16757]

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for Remploy has been delegated, by the Employment Department, to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has asked the chief executive to provide information on the number of Remploy units and employees in these units. This information is not available at county level in Wales and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Out-patients

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to the NHS in Wales of the non-attenders to out-patient appointments in 1993–94. [17712]

Mr. Redwood: No calculation is made centrally of the cost of failures to attend out-patient appointments in hospitals in Wales.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received from individual members of the board of the Countryside Council for Wales during the current year which have been critical of his proposals for the funding of the Countryside Council for Wales. [18638]

Mr. Redwood: One.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received from the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales from 1 January to date concerning the funding of the Countryside Council for Wales; and on what dates he received such correspondence. [18737]

Mr. Redwood: I have received two such letters dated 27 February and 9 March.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares of land were set aside under the arable area payments scheme in Wales in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95 and what is his estimate of the number of hectares of land that will be set aside in 1995–96. [18660]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Some 3,114 hectares of land were set aside under the arable area payments scheme in 1993–94 and 4,181 hectares in 1994–95.

It is too early to estimate the hectarage for 1995–96 as farmers do not have to submit their integrated administration and control system applications until 15 May.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many claims were made in Wales (1) for set-aside and (2) in total under the arable area payments scheme in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95 of (a) between zero and £5,000, (b) between £5,001 and £10,000, (c) between £10,001 and £15,000, (d) between 15,001 and £20,000, (e) between £20,001 and £25,000, (f) 25,001 and £50,000, (g) between £50,001 and £75,000, (h) between £75,001 and £100,000, (i) between £100,001 and £150,000, (j) between £150,000 and £200,000, (k) between £200,001 and £1 million and (l) over £1 million; and what is his latest estimate of the number of claims that will be made in 1995–96 in each value band. [18630]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures requested are as follows:

	1993–94		1994–95
	Set aside	Total	Set aside	Total
£0–£5,000	285	2,282	331	2,177
£5,001–£10,000	13	134	32	148
£10,001–£15,000	1	50	6	79
£15,001–£20,000	1	21	3	46
£20,001–£25,000	—	8	—	21
£25,001–£50,000	—	12	—	25
£50,001–£75,000	—	—	—	11
£75,001–£100,000	—	—	—	1

There were no claims above £100,000.

It is too early to estimate number of claims in 1995–96 as farmers do not have to submit their IACS applications until 15 May.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of payments under the arable area payments scheme (a) for set-aside and (b) in total in Wales in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) in 1994–95 and what is his estimate of the cost of payments in 1995–96. [18631]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Total payments under the arable area payments scheme for (a) set-aside amounted to £617,380 in 1993–94 and £1,104,525 in 1994–95 and (b) in total amounted to £5,526,389 in 1993–94 and £7,923,953 in 1994–95. It is too early to estimate payments for 1995–96 as farmers do not have to submit their IACS applications until 15 May.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18651]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is the "Green Minister" for the Welsh Office, having special responsibility for its environmental policies and programmes. Details of these can be found in the latest Welsh Office departmental report, Cm 2815, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The proceedings of Cabinet and Cabinet committees, and communications between Ministers, are confidential. However, the latest position on the Government's overall strategy on the environment is set out in "This Common Inheritance—UK Annual Report 1995", Cm 2822, a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18585]

Mr. Redwood: My Department has a disabled persons officer to identify needs of disabled people and to ensure that a range of specialist facilities and services are provided in meeting those needs wherever it is safe and practicable to do so. At office buildings, these include reserved car parking, adaptations to entrances and building layouts, toilets, modifications to lifts and service installations, vehicles, furniture, telephones, computers and other office equipment. The Cadw agency also makes special arrangements for easy access to monuments which the disabled people can visit in safety; full details are published in a Cadw information sheet for people with disabilities.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce further guidance notes to footnote (7) to appendix 1 in his departmental report published on 9 March, when he has reached agreement with the local authorities and the other bodies eligible for funding for infrastructure projects from the European regional development fund on the split between allocation to local authorities and the other eligible bodies for the year 1995–96 to 1997–98, and if he will make a statement. [14762]

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 March 1995]: At no point does the Department agree with the various sponsors of ERDF projects any split between the allocations to local authorities and other eligible bodies. The distribution of the resources under the objective 2 and 5b programmes is made by the technical working groups of the monitoring committees on a project-by-project basis. Decisions are taken throughout the life of these programmes on the basis of agreed selection criteria.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18455]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18456]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18457]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to an hon. or right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question. [18458]

Mr. Newton: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18459]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report, in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18460]

Mr. Newton: None. I am not responsible for any non-departmental public bodies or agencies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pension Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he received the report by the Government Actuary on the valuation of the parliamentary contribution pension fund as at 1 April; when the report was laid on the Table; and when copies of it were placed in the Vote Office of the House. [18768]

Mr. Newton: I received the report on 28 March; copies were sent to the right hon. Member and other trustees of the parliamentary contributory pension fund on 29 March; it was laid on the Table on 30 March and copies were placed in the Vote Office on 4 April.

Secretarial Allowance and Pensions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress he has made on taking forward recommendations made by the Senior Salaries Review Body on the temporary secretarial allowance and secretarial pensions; and if he will make a statement. [17509]

Mr. Newton: A number of modifications are proposed to take account of practical problems identified in the report and representations from a number of hon. Members, including the hon. Lady herself. These have been approved by Madam Speaker. The Accountant is writing to all hon. Members with details of the modifications, which are being implemented with effect from 1 April 1995.

Parliamentary Channel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representation he has received about the cost to subscribers to Videotron's Option 1 of receiving the Parliamentary channel. [16626]

Mr. Newton: No such representations have been received.

Lord Advocate

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his letter, on what aspects of the Lockerbie case the Lord Advocate can volunteer a statement to the Scottish Grand Committee. [18095]

Mr. Newton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate cannot properly volunteer a statement on aspects of a particular criminal case. Although the Lord Advocate can make a statement to the Scottish Grand Committee under Standing Order No. 94D(2)(a) to facilitate his questioning by members of the Committee about a matter relating to his officials' responsibilities, to the extent that they fall within the order of reference of the Scottish Affairs Committee established under Standing Order No. 130, the consideration of individual cases is excluded under that standing order. In this regard, the Lockerbie case is no different from any other current criminal case.

In addition, provision is made under Standing Order No. 94D(2)(b) for a Law Officer to announce the policy of the Government on a matter relating to Scotland or the response of the Government to an event relating to Scotland. However, having regard to the interests of justice, it would be improper for the Lord Advocate to make any announcement giving details of the evidence or any investigative steps in relation to any criminal case while proceedings are pending. Once again, in this regard the Lockerbie case is no different from any other criminal case.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his letter, in what circumstances the Lord Advocate can attend the Scottish Grand Committee. [18094]

Mr. Newton: The Lord Advocate, who is not a member of the Scottish Grand Committee, may attend the Committee by virtue of Standing Order No. 94D. Under paragraph (1) of that standing order, the Chairman of the Committee may permit a Scottish Law Officer, whether or not a member of the Committee, to make a statement, of which prior notice has been given to him, and to answer questions thereon put by members of the Committee. Paragraph (4) provides that a Law Officer who is not a member of the Committee may not make a statement from the body of the Committee, and shall not vote, make any motion or be counted in the quorum.

Press Gallery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will arrange improvements to the comfort of the seating in the Press Gallery.

Mr. Ray Powell: No improvements are presently planned. If the hon. Member has specific proposals, he should write to the Director of Parliamentary Works.

Parliamentary Data and Video Network

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee when GroupWise was promised for the PDVN; when it was delivered for DOS and Windows users; when it will be working for Apple Macintosh users; and how much Novell will have to pay for late delivery.

Mr. Waller: GroupWise is version 4 of the software package formerly known as WordPerfect Office which constitutes the main user software for the Parliamentary Data and Video Network. A useable version of GroupWise version 4.1 for Windows was delivered on 15 November 1994. A version for DOS was received by instalments soon afterwards and is still being evaluated. The final sections of the UK version for Apple will be provided in early May 1995.

The agreement with WordPerfect which was due to expire at the end of February 1995 was renegotiated with Novell, which has now taken over the WordPerfect corporation, for an additional year, compensating the House for the fact that it was not possible to upgrade from WordPerfect Office version 3 to GroupWise version 4 during 1993–1994.

Fire Officers

Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many fire officers are employed full and part time in the Palace of Westminster; who pays for them; what is the cost to public funds and what has been the cost to public funds, with particular reference to the Palace and its estate, of implementing fire regulations.

Mr. Beith: The agreed complement of the Palace of Westminster fire section is one principal fire officer, four senior fire officers and 24 fire officers. Members of the fire section are civilian employees of the Metropolitan police. The cost of the service to the House of Commons was £570,000 in the last financial year. During the period 1993 to 1999, an average expenditure of approximately £1 million per annum has been planned towards meeting fire safety requirements throughout the parliamentary estate.

Family Mediation Exhibition

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to family mediation services to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Tuesday 6 June to Friday 9 June 1995.

Energy Efficiency

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what measures were taken in 1994 to improve energy efficiency in the Palace of Westminster and increase recycling facilities in the Palace of Westminster; and what is the percentage of (a) stationery used within the Palace of Westminster which is made of recycled material and (b) paper, tin, plastic and glass waste produced in the Palace of Westminster which is recycled.

Mr. Ray Powell: A report by the Director of Works entitled "Energy Conservation on the Parliamentary Estate" dated 20 June 1994 describes the measures being taken and is available in the Library. During the financial year 1993–94, approximately 30 per cent. of stationery provided for Members' use from the Serjeant at Arms's store was made of recycled material. All non-confidential waste paper, glass, plastic and recycled metal is recycled.

TRANSPORT

Railways (Safety Plan)

Mr. Budgen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the railway group safety plan for 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [19305]

Mr. Watts: The Railtrack board has now submitted a 1995 safety plan for Britain's national railway network. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The plan sets out strategic safety objectives for 1995–96, reports safety performance by British Rail and Railtrack in 1994–95 and gives details of the arrangements for managing safety on the railway. The objectives are designed to maintain safety and to set strategic objectives to improve it wherever practicable. Railtrack and operators have developed programmes and action plans designed to achieve their individual and shared objectives. The plan is also an important companion to railway safety cases, and will ensure that full and proper attention is paid to safety during the privatisation process.

RAF Northolt

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have to assist business aviation at RAF Northolt; and if he will make a statement. [19247]

Mr. Norris: The Government carried out a consultation exercise last year with business users on the possibility of creating a civil enclave at RAF Northolt to make better use of the existing capacity. Responses showed that the high capital costs and physical constraints would make this financially unviable. The Government do not intend to pursue this proposal.

However, it is clear that the business aviation industry would welcome increased activity at Northolt through extending shared use of the facilities. The Government will consult further with the industry, and take into account the views of the local communities and other interested parties, to identify detailed working arrangements at Northolt which could improve the service offered to users and to business in the south-east more generally.

Driving Licences (Fitness to Drive)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of motorists who, since the implementation of the Road Traffic Act 1988, have notified the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency of (a) any disability or condition that affects their fitness to drive or which might do so in the future and (b) the proportion of this total that have glaucoma. [17870]

Mr. Norris: Between January 1989 and December 1994, the DVLA received 2,016,601 notification of medical conditions—some drivers would have submitted more than one notification in that period. The number of notifications of glaucoma from January 1992 to December 1994 was 11,211. Figures prior to 1992 are not available.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what publicity measures his Department have taken to inform drivers of their requirement under the Road Traffic Act 1988 to notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency of any disability or condition that affects their fitness to drive or which might do so in the future. [17871]

Mr. Norris: Every driving licence carries a note reminding the holder of his obligation to notify the DVLA of the worsening of an existing medical condition or the onset of a new condition. Leaflet INS 57 which is issued with every driving licence carries a similar message.

Leaflet D100 "What you need to know about driving licences", available from most post offices, carries more detailed information.

Between February 1994 and January 1995, a leaflet aimed at older drivers which reinforced the medical requirements was issued with all vehicle excise licence reminders.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18600]

Mr. Norris: Advice about space planning and risk assessment for people with disabilities has been issued to my Department's property managers. They have been asked to improve access to and within buildings.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information superhighway. [17734]

Mr. Norris: Neither the Department centrally, nor Ministers, have Internet addresses. The Transport Research Laboratory and several hundred staff in the Department have Internet mail addresses used for specific aspects of their work. The Department is currently reviewing the scope for wider use of the Internet in planning new internal and external electronic mail facilities for installation in 1996.

Railways (Passenger Service Requirements)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the basis for the passenger service requirements; and how long his Department has been researching passenger service requirements as a way of improving the rail system. [17369]

Mr. Watts: The guidance issued to the franchising director by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport requires him to ensure that passenger service requirements for the first franchises are based upon the timetable being operated by BR immediately prior to franchising. A copy of an explanatory note setting out the franchising director's approach to, and criteria for, setting these passenger service requirements has been placed in the Library of the House.

The White Paper "New Opportunities for the Railways:the Privatisation of British Rail"—July 1992, CM 2012—set out proposals for specifying service levels in franchise agreements as an important element in our plans for improving passenger services.

Public Bodies

Mrs. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17640]

Mr. Norris: The information on non-departmental public bodies and agencies is not held centrally, nor are figures readily available elsewhere. Such data as could be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs are in the following table.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18646]

Dr. Mawhinney: I am the green Minister for the Department of Transport but all my ministerial colleagues share a common objective of promoting transport policies compatible with sustainable development.

My aims for transport, as set out in "This Common Inheritance 1995" are to develop appropriate national and local strategies and measures for reducing the need to travel and to encourage more sustainable and environmentally acceptable patterns of transport.

I have been fully involved in consultations on the Environment Bill.

Private Detective Agencies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date, and what is the current cost per month, of his Department's and the Highways Agency's use of (a) Brays private detective agency, and (b) other private detective agencies and if he will give a breakdown of those costs per road scheme or project.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 5 April 1995:

Mr. John Watts has asked me to write in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the use by the Department of Transport and the Highways Agency of Brays and other private detective agencies in connection with road schemes.

Detective agencies have been employed by solicitors, on behalf of the Department on the following schemes. The information you requested is below. All but £200 of the payments, marked *, were to Brays Detective Agency.

Road scheme	Paid to date £	Estimated ongoing monthly cost £
A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road	294,000	25,000
A4/A6 Batheaston/Swainswick Bypass	150,000	Nil
M3 Bar End-Compton	259,000	Nil
M65 Blackburn Southern Bypass	1,500 *200	Nil

Road scheme	Paid to date £	Estimated ongoing monthly cost £
A34 Newbury Bypass	300	Nil
A11 Besthorpe-Wymondham	450	Nil
Total of all above	705,450	25,000

The figures have been rounded. I hope this is sufficient for your purposes.

Disabled People (Transec)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the facilities for staff with disability provided in the new accommodation occupied by the transport security division; and if he will give full financial and technical details regarding lifts and arrangements for the evacuation of disabled staff in the case of an emergency. [17904]

Mr. Norris: Transec's accommodation provides facilities for visitors and staff with disabilities. These include parking spaces, access ramps suitable for wheelchairs and a special toilet. The landlord is responsible for ensuring that the lifts comply with all legal requirements and for meeting any costs. A copy of Transec's incident control procedures, which include emergency arrangements for the evacuation of all staff, will be placed in the Library.

Railway Passenger Services Funding

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State (1) what amount and type of funding will be made available to the South Yorkshire passenger transport executive to support local railway services after the expiry of metropolitan railways grant; [18021]

(2) if he will make it his policy to announce replacement funding for metropolitan railways grant before May; and if he will notify passenger transport executives of the arrangements in sufficient time to allow them to support services under a seven-year franchise. [18022]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend proposes to replace the current temporary arrangements, whereby revenue support for railway passenger services funded by English passenger transport executives is divided between revenue support grant and metropolitan railway grant, with an enhanced RSG with effect from 1996–97. The proposed arrangements for allocating the enhanced RSG to PTEs have been set out in a consultation paper, which has been circulated to the PTEs with an invitation to comment by the middle of April. We intend to announce a final decision on future funding for PTE supported railway passenger services shortly after that date.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18505]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18506]

(3) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18510]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18508]

(5) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18507]

(6) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18509]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is a matter of public record, but could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Coach Parking, London

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy for providing coach parks in central London, with particular reference to coaches bringing tourists to visit the Palace of Westminster and Westminster Abbey; and if he will make a statement. [18096]

Mr. Norris: It is for the London boroughs to provide coach parking facilities. With this Department's encouragement, discussions between the boroughs, the coach and tourist industries and others have recently brought significant improvements, including the provision of 150 new coach spaces in central London.

Pedestrian Rights

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the implementation of the European charter of pedestrian rights. [18235]

Mr. Norris: The Government endorse the intentions of the charter to promote the principle of pedestrians as road users, but we do not believe that it would be practicable to adopt all of its detailed requirements.

Correspondence

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Under-Secretary of State for Transport will reply to the letters from Mr. Brian Bostock, dated 20 February and 8 March. [18264]

Mr. Norris: I replied to Mr. Bostock's letter of 8 March on 28 March. My Department has no trace of his letter of 20 February.

Railway Noise Barriers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost per metre of (a) reflective and (b) absorbent railway noise barriers of a common height. [18397]

Mr. Watts: Railway noise barriers vary in height, but the most commonly used are 2m high. The comparative costs per linear metre at this height are £210 for a reflective barrier and £340 for an absorptive barrier. The costs quoted are for barriers alongside a new railway line and include installation.

Defective Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances a public service passenger vehicle may remain in service with a defective speedometer or tachograph. [18263]

Mr. Norris: It is an offence to use, cause or permit to be used any vehicle on a road which does not comply with the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 which include provisions relating to speedometers and recording equipment.

In addition, under European legislation, in the event of a breakdown or faulty operation of a tachograph, the employer must have it repaired by an approved fitter or workshop as soon as circumstances permit or, if the vehicle is unable to return to the premises within one week, en route.

Pedestrian Zones

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken into the extent to which restrictions on vehicles entering pedestrian-only zones are flouted. [18234]

Mr. Norris: None. Local authorities are solely responsible for the day-to-day administration of their pedestrian zones.

DEFENCE

Phoenix

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a decision will be taken on the future of the Phoenix remotely piloted vehicle programme; and if he will make a statement. [18774]

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence has reviewed the Phoenix programme to determine how best to proceed in the light of delays to the programme and remaining technical problems.

Subject to the satisfactory conclusion of an agreement with the prime contractor, GEC-Marconi Avionics, we have decided that an additional programme of work on Phoenix should be undertaken to resolve the remaining technical difficulties and to demonstrate satisfactory system performance over a series of rigorous flight trials. This programme of work, which will last about one year, will be undertaken at the contractor's expense. The MOD will make no further payments to the company for the supply of Phoenix until the successful completion of the programme.

We believe that, provided the remaining technical problems can be overcome within an acceptable time scale, the Phoenix system will provide a cost-effective means of meeting the Army's need for an unmanned airborne surveillance system. Should GMAv fail at any stage to demonstrate satisfactory progress during the programme of work, the Ministry of Defence will, however, be prepared to cancel the project. While the work is in progress we will, therefore, examine potential alternative systems, in case it does not prove practicable to bring Phoenix up to an acceptable standard.

The prime contractor's undertaking to carry out the necessary work at its own cost and risk will require the company to apply considerable additional resources. We welcome this substantial commitment on its part, which reflects the confidence expressed at the most senior levels of the company in its ability to produce an effective system. In the meantime, the position of the Ministry of Defence and the interests of the taxpayer have been fully protected.

Defence Accounts Agency

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the first three-year review of the Defence Accounts Agency have now been completed; and if he will make a statement. [18775]

Mr. Freeman: The review of the first three years of operation of the Defence Accounts Agency has now been completed and I have placed a consultative document, summarising its findings; the options for the future; and the proposed way ahead in the Library of the House.

The Ministry of Defence has also now considered the future of the proposed Defence Accounts Agency mainframe rationalisation project. We have decided in the light of the conclusions of the review, that it would not now be appropriate to proceed with this project.

Service Career and Manpower Structures

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy towards performance-related pay for the Armed Forces; [18297]

(2) what consideration he is giving to a reduction in the number of ranks in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement; [18299]

(3) when he expects to make a statement concerning the Bett report. [18298]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 4 April 1995]: My right hon. Friend, the then Minister for the Armed Forces, announced on 9 February 1994, Official Report, column 361, the intention, in the light of changes in military commitments and deployment patterns, to set in hand a major independent review of service career and manpower structures and terms and conditions of service, to ensure that we will have personnel and management arrangements appropriate to the early part of the 21st century. The review was to be wide-ranging in accordance with the terms of reference set out on 30 March 1994, Official Report, columns 748–49. It was also to take into account the implications of the front line first exercise. In that context, the Government have made it clear that, following the decisions that have been taken on the size, capabilities and roles of the armed forces for the post-cold war world, the armed forces are now set on a steady course for the future. Mr. Michael Bett was appointed to lead the review.

Mr. Bett and his team have completed their review; I received their report, "Managing People in Tomorrow's Armed Forces", on 30 March. Mr. Bett has consulted extensively within the armed forces and within my Department. He has made some 150 recommendations which cover the whole field of rank and career structures, pay and allowance structures and pensions, housing and accommodation policies and wider conditions of service. As Mr. Bett says, his intention has been to ensure that the armed forces continue to hold their own against civilian competitors, in recruiting and retaining high quality people. We are most grateful to Mr. Bett and his team for all their work.

Mr. Bett has undertaken an independent review; we now need to consider his recommendations. Our initial examination is likely to take several weeks, and will include a consideration of the amount of further study and development required to validate Mr. Bett's proposals. I shall make a further statement about our general approach at the end of that period. Thereafter, there will need to be a further, more lengthy development period before a final definitive response to the report can be made.

Throughout this process, I intend that, as for front line first, the armed forces themselves should be fully involved. Service personnel will be encouraged to submit their comments, which we shall consider carefully. In the meantime, to assist in the consultation process, Mr. Bett's report is being published today. A copy of the report is being distributed to every unit of the armed forces, together with an explanatory leaflet for every service man and woman. Copies of the report and leaflet are being placed in the Library of the House.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17739]

Mr. Freeman: For security reasons, the MOD does not use Internet electronic mail widely for communication within this Department. This function is served by the Department's own secure electronic mail facility within its corporate headquarters office technology system.

Departmental Internet electronic mail addresses are not centrally co-ordinated within MOD and no list is available. However, there are estimated to be several hundred personal addresses rising to more than a thousand if the Defence Research Agency is included. There are no personal Internet electronic mail addressees for MOD Ministers.

The Department's approach to the information super-highway is that it may be used where appropriate. For example, the Department's press releases are issued electronically through the Central Office of Information and are accessible to users of Internet via Data-Star dialog (Europe) or Mead/Lexis/Nexis.

RAF Strategic Deterrent Force

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review process was adopted in regard to the official history commissioned from Humphrey Wynn on the RAF strategic nuclear deterrent forces, published by HMSO. [17519]

Mr. Soames: Humphrey Wynn's official history on the RAF strategic nuclear deterrent forces was reviewed in accordance with the initiatives set out in paragraph 9.28 of the White Paper on Open Government, Cmd 2290, and released under the provisions of section 5(1) of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967.

Aircraft Crashes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what post-crash investigations into the possibility of toxic contamination are conducted by or on behalf of his Department in the event of accidents involving RAF or Royal Naval aircraft. [17517]

Mr. Soames: An RAF environmental health officer is held at immediate readiness at all times to attend aircraft crash sites to identify hazards. The EHO's role is to provide occupational hygiene advice and monitoring for other personnel attending the crash site and environmental monitoring of the site to advise on soil and water contamination.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an investigation into the recent allegations published in Newfoundland that an RAF Canberra aircraft carrying radioactive samples crashed at Goose bay, Newfoundland in 1957. [17518]

Mr. Soames: I am unaware of these allegations. I can confirm that an RAF Canberra crashed in the vicinity of Goose bay, Labrador, on 16 May 1957. An investigation into the incident was conducted at the time, and I know of no reason to reopen it.

Airport Use

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for transport in respect of the possibility of using BAe-owned airports for civilian use in areas where current civilian airports are overcrowded. [17377]

Mr. Freeman: None.

Disabled Former Service Personnel

Mr. Jim Cunnigham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making to ensure that those disabled former members of the armed forces are assisted in finding insurance to meet mortgage interest payments. [17374]

Mr. Soames: My Department makes no specific arrangements to assist disabled former members of the armed forces in finding insurance to meet mortgage interest payments. All service personnel discharged on medical grounds are advised by a resettlement advice officer on how best to prepare for entry to civilian life, and this advice covers a number of aspects such as employment, housing and financial matters.

Major Projects (Late Running)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to remedy the late running of major defence projects; and what was the total amount of cost overruns in the current financial year. [17375]

Mr. Freeman: My Department has instituted several initiatives in recent years to improve the timeliness of delivery of major projects. These initiatives include tauter contracting; improved risk management; better training and guidance for project managers; and procedures for better estimation of in-service dates. Information on Defence equipment cost control performance was published in March 1995 in the MOD's departmental report, Cm 2801, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Nigeria (Visits)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the exact dates of visits by officials in his Department to Nigeria since June 1993 and the reason for the visit in each case. [17777]

Mr. Freeman: My Department does not hold a central record of visits by officials overseas nor could one be provided except at disproportionate cost. No official visits to Nigeria since June 1993 have been identified.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Nigeria since June 1993 listing the Ministers and the reasons for the visit in each case. [17782]

Mr. Freeman: There have been no visits to Nigeria by Ministers in my Department since June 1993.

Arms Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures his Department will be implementing to ensure that all future transfers of military, security and police equipment, including dual-use technologies, will comply with the European Parliament resolution, passed on 19th January. [17781]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. colleague the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology to him.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on the marine environment of any leakage of the contents of the ships scuttled in the Irish Sea in the mid-1950s; [17849]

(2) on how many occasions since 1965 ordnance, nerve gases and other noxious agents have been dumped at sea. [17851]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 448, 3 February, Official Report, column 890, and 31 March, Official Report, columns 875–76, to the hon. Members for South Shields (Dr. Clark) and for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy for getting rid of surplus ordnance and chemical and biological weapons. [17850]

Mr. Soames: Surplus conventional munitions are disposed of by demolition, open burning or breakdown. The UK no longer holds stocks of chemical weapon munitions, and any old chemical weapons munitions found in the UK are transferred to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down, where rounds are individually analysed and the chemical agent "fill" disposed of by incineration. Biological weapons were abandoned by the UK in the 1950s: there has been no recent requirement to dispose of any such weapons.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that nerve gases, bombs and other noxious agents dumped in the North sea in the mid-1950s do not pose a threat to coastal areas of the United Kingdom and Ireland and to the marine environment. [17852]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no knowledge of dumping of any chemical munitions or their agents in the North sea in the 1950s.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the reason for the low-level pass over Bessacarr, Doncaster, by an RAF jet at 19.28 on 23 March. [17833]

Mr. Soames: Two formations of two United States Air Force F-15 aircraft were authorised to fly in the general area around this time, and an investigation is underway to establish whether these aircraft flew at low level over Bessacarr. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member when this is complete.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of the training exercise which brought eight Tornado aircraft from RAF Bruggen to Barnoldswick on 30 January . [17853]

Mr. Soames: The cost of the training sortie was £117,000. As the hon. Member is aware from my answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 463, an investigation is under way to establish whether the aircraft flew over Barnoldswick.

Tornado Crashes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, column 397, how many RAF personnel or civilians were killed or injured as a result of the Tornado crashes. [17806]

Mr. Soames: A total of 17 RAF personnel and two civilians were killed in the Tornado crashes referred to.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, column 397, what reasons have been established for each of the Tornado crashes. [17804]

Mr. Soames: Summaries of the RAF boards of inquiry into all but four of the crashes referred to in the question can be found in the Library of the House. Boards of inquiry into the remaining four are still under way and copies of the summary of their findings will be placed in the Library in due course.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Offical Report, column 397, what was the replacement cost of the 27 Tornado aircraft lost since 1981. [17805]

Mr. Soames: Of the 27 Tornado aircraft which crashed over the UK land area or at sea in UK waters, four have been repaired. No replacement costs arise for the remaining 23 aircraft since there is an attrition reserve from which aircraft are taken to replace those lost. Records are not maintained centrally of other costs which may arise from an accident, such as aircraft salvage or third party claims.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Offical Report, column 397, if any of the 17 Tornados which crashed on land did so in built up-area. [17807]

Mr. Soames: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF Tornado aircraft have crashed since 1983 outside United Kingdom land and United Kingdom-controlled sea (a) in military operations, (b) as a result of pilot error and (c) due to mechanical or similar failure. [17848]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

(a) six Tornados crashed during combat sorties during the Gulf conflict.

Completed RAF boards of inquiry concluded that:

(b) six Tornados have crashed as a result of aircrew error;

(c) three Tornados have crashed as a result of mechanical or similar failure.

Sarin

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the chemical agent Sarin was stored at RAF Llandwrog. [17893]

Mr. Soames: No Sarin was stored at RAF Llandwrog.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18454]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18450]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18452]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18451]

(5) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18449]

(6) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18453]

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17617]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of aid in each of the last five financial years from his Department to states of the former Soviet Union; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure has been taken. [18126]

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence's programme of promoting bilateral defence cooperation and contacts with central and eastern Europe—including the states of the former Soviet Union—began in 1993–94 and involved expenditure of £70,000 under vote 1E1, in that same year. The budget for 1994–95 was increased to £200,000. In addition, the MOD has on occasion agreed to waive costs of training provided to central and eastern European countries where the aims serve defence interests. The total of these waivers was £77,000 in 1993–94 and £456,000 in 1994–95.

The Ministry of Defence is also assisting Russia in the removal of nuclear warheads and intercontinental ballistic missiles to destruction sites. The total costs of this fall to vote 3B4 and are:

1992–93: £2.2 million

1993–94: £13.4 million

1994–95: £16.6 million

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the total cost of procurement for the Trident system in (a) the current financial year and (b) the financial year 1995–96; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure is taken; [18130]

(2) what is the total cost of running the strategic weapons system in (a) the current financial year and (b) the financial year 1995–96; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure is taken; [18128]

(3) what is the total cost of construction in support of the Trident programme at Faslane and Coulport in (a) the current financial year and (b) the financial year 1995–96; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure is taken. [18131]

Mr. Freeman: Estimated expenditure in 1994–95 and 1995–96, where available, is as follows:

	1994–95 £ million	1995–96 £ million	Subhead vote
Trident System[1]	696.0	456.0	[2]n/a
Strategic Weapon System Running Costs (Polaris and Trident missiles)	[3]86.5	[4]n/a	2A1, 2A2, 3C2, 3D2
Trident Construction Programme (Faslane and Coulport)	42.0	6.2	3D1

Notes:

[1] As well as all costs associated with the submarine and its weapons and other systems, the figures include the shore construction costs which are also shown separately in the table.

[2] Details of the vote subheads of all acquisition costs attributable to the Trident system are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[3] This figure includes the cost of repairs, spares and technical, storage and engineering services provided by contractors and MOD at various locations in support of the UK's Polaris and Trident missiles.

[4] Estimated costs for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Mutual Defence Co-operation Agreement

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department of the administrative expenses of the mutual defence co-operation agreement with the United States of America. [18124]

Mr. Freeman: Administrative tasks associated with business conducted under the aegis of the 1958 UK/US mutual defence agreement are mostly handled by the atomic control office, London and the atomic co-ordinating offices at Aldermaston and Washington. The costs of these tasks are not calculated separately.

Nuclear Submarine Decommissioning Costs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of provision for nuclear submarine decommissioning costs in (a) the current financial year and (b) the financial year 1995–96; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure is taken. [18132]

Mr. Freeman: The estimated cost of decommissioning nuclear submarines in 1994–95 was £4.3 million and the provision for 1995–96 is £9.2 million. These costs are attributed to class I vote 2, subhead 2A21.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the variation in expenditure from Class I, Vote 1, Subhead B4 of his Department's budget for the last three years. [18125]

Mr. Soames: There is no such subhead. There is, however, a subhead B4 in class I vote 3.

The year-on-year variations against this subhead reflect the progress of this programme, which peaked in 1994–95 and is now nearing completion.

Nuclear Equipment Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for delivery of nuclear warhead containers and transport equipment to Russia. [18127]

Mr. Freeman: To date, 155 super-containers have been delivered. The remaining 95 will be delivered in two shipments which will be made in April and June of this year.

Production of the transport equipment has been completed. Delivery of the truck cargo heavy duty (Russia) (TCHD(R))s has slipped from the original schedule, due to difficulties of siting support staff in Russia. These have now been resolved and deliveries are expected to commence in the middle of this year, completion being by early March 1996.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has an on-going requirement for carrying out nuclear tests in relation to the safety and reliability of the nuclear stockpile. [18121]

Mr. Freeman: We have a responsibility to ensure the safety and reliability of our nuclear weapons and we are currently studying how best to meet this requirement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy in relation to hydro-nuclear experiments and the proposed comprehensive test ban treaty. [18147]

Mr. Freeman: We are negotiating in good faith a comprehensive test ban treaty with an effective verification regime. We are studying how best to meet our responsibility to ensure the safety and reliability of our nuclear weapons under such a treaty.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of running the Atomic Weapons Establishment in (a) the current financial year and (b) the financial year 1995–96; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure is taken. [18129]

Mr. Freeman: The costs of the defence nuclear programme have been regarded by successive Governments as inappropriate for public disclosure. With contractorisation, AWE operating costs have also become commercially sensitive.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who, within his Department, is to be authorised to have direct access to the police national computer; and what procedures are being established for ensuring that information gained from this source is handled correctly. [18133]

Mr. Soames: As a fully constituted and recognised police force, the Ministry of Defence police have for some time had direct access to the police national computer. The procedures in place to ensure that information is handled correctly are those issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Direct access to the specific transaction for security vetting has also been approved for the Department's security vetting organisations. The service, which has not yet been implemented, will be subject to a memorandum of agreement with the Home Office which will set out the operating procedures and the purposes for which the information will be used.

British Meat

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what percentage by value of meat purchasing contracts placed by his Department is the origin of the meat specified; what percentage is specified as British meat; what percentage is specified only as imported meat; and what percentage is specified as British or imported meat. [18347]

Mr. Freeman: Since 1 October 1994, the supply of food to the armed forces has been the responsibility of the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute. My Department does not specify the source from which meat should be obtained.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department in the last year for which figures are available on British meat; and how much was spent on imported meat. [18346]

Mr. Freeman: Contract specifications for the supply of meat to the armed forces are concerned with quality and price and do not stipulate the source from which meat should be obtained. The information requested is therefore not available.

Transport (Royal Family)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the costs for the last two years and what are the estimated costs for the current year and the next two years of (a) the royal yacht, (b) the Queen's flight, (c) royal flights in civil aircraft and (d) equerries. [18049]

Mr. Soames: Actual and estimated expenditure in support of the royal family borne by my Department on class I votes is as follows:

£ thousands

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95[1]	1995–96[2]
Royal yacht	8,361	8,397	11,090	8,411
Queen's Flight[3]	7,590	9,105	8,893	n/a
Royal flights in civil aircraft	9	140	160	480
Equerries	170	316	319	292

Notes:

[1] Current forecast of outturn.

[2] Amount included within the Class I 1995–96 Supply Estimates presented to the House on 23 March 1995.

[3] Total operating cost. The Queen's Flight has not been used exclusively by the Royal Family, and it would not therefore be possible to allocate expenditure to users without disproportionate cost. On 1 April the Queen's Flight was merged with 32 Squadron to become No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. A disaggregated element of the cost of royal flying is being established.

We do not publish detailed future plans, as approval to commit expenditure is subject to formal endorsement through Ministers and the parliamentary supply system. Figures for 1996–97 are therefore not yet available.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18597]

Mr. Freeman: Because my Department does not deal with the public direct, the main thrust of our initiatives aimed at providing access and facilities for disabled people relates to our role as an employer of civilian staff. These initiatives form part of my Department's programme for action on disability called "Ability not Disability", which aims to achieve equality of opportunity for disabled people in recruitment, training and career development. One specific action within the programme is a survey of all buildings housing 100 or more staff to identify what needs to be done to make them accessible to disabled people, and to fund the necessary modifications by 1999.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the green minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18656]

Mr. Freeman: My noble friend Lord Henley, the Under-Secretary of State for Defence, is the Department's green Minister. He chairs the ministerial steering group which provides policy direction and determines appropriate environmental and energy efficiency strategies to ensure compliance with relevant United Kingdom legislation, EC directives and wider Government policy. The ministerial steering group has initiated a programme of environmental reviews of defence activities which have the potential to harm the environment. These include reviews of land contamination and the defence estate; pollution prevention procedures; the use of particularly hazardous substances and my Department's aqueous discharge and water abstraction arrangements.

Army Vehicles

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the trial for a replacement of the Army's Land Rover 1 tonne and three-quarter tonne ambulances. [18792]

Mr. Freeman: The competitive evaluation trial has been completed, and the technical reports are now in preparation. It is anticipated that a final decision on the outcome of the competition will be made in late summer with contract placement expected by early October this year.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18321]

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 April 1995]: I have asked the chief executives of the agencies to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Jim Drew to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

I have been asked to reply, as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO), to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have a) been taken over by contractors and b) disappeared.

Since ABRO was launched as a Defence Agency on 1 April 1993, no jobs have been lost as a result of being taken over by contractors. The number of staff in the Organisation has however reduced from 3800 to 3379. A significant proportion of the reduction has been in military posts—the result of a combination of efficiency savings and a policy of transferring military posts to units providing first and second line support to Army field units. The remaining reduction is attributable to efficiency measures undertaken at the Agency's workshops.

I hope that you find this information useful.

Letter from Peter Trevelyan to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

Minister (DP) has asked me to write to you on behalf of the Defence Accounts Agency in reply to your Parliamentary Question, number 7171G, in which you asked for a list of the jobs that have been lost to Agencies in the Ministry of Defence in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

The Defence Accounts Agency was formed four years ago with a staff of about 2,000. Since its formation no further jobs have been transferred to it by the Ministry of Defence. The Defence Accounts Agency has neither been taken over by a contractor nor disappeared.

I hope that this reply is satisfactory.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

PQ NO 7171G

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your question about jobs lost to agencies in the past two years.

Taking the individual parts of your question, the Defence Analytical Services Agency has:

a. had no jobs taken over by contractors

b. disestablished 29 posts as part of the Department wide PROSPECT initiative.

Letter from Andrew Roache to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question No 7171G, where you ask to list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have a) been taken over by contractors and b) disappeared.

I have interpreted your question to mean jobs lost from the agency during this period. Since the Defence Animal Centre (DAC) was launched as a Defence Agency in June 1993, no jobs have been lost as a result of being taken over by contractors.

As a result of the MOD-wide Options for Change initiative and Defence Costs Study measures 46 military posts have been lost with effect 1 April 1995.

I hope you find this information useful.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

1. In today's written answer the Minister for State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question concerning job losses in the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). DERA was formed on 1 April 1995 to bring together most of the MOD's non-nuclear science and technology resources and it includes three former MOD agencies, the Defence Research Agency (DRA), the Defence Operational Analysis Centre (DOAC), and the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE).

2. As Chief Executive of DERA I now have responsibility for all these areas. All three agencies have undergone some structural changes as a result of their incorporation into DERA and there may be some reduction in numbers resulting from the formation of the new agency. Specific figures are not yet available.

3. Between April 1993 and March 1995 there were 62 job losses at DOAC and 17 job losses at CBDE, none of which were contractorised; the savings have been achieved through efficiencies.

4. The reduction in posts in the Defence Research Agency between April 1993 and March 1995 amount to 1600 of which 390 were redeployed, the majority within DRA. These reductions have arisen from a combination of a reduction in demand for services as the disciplines of hard charging for services have led to more critical scrutiny of real need by customers, and, efficiency improvements achieved through rationalisation and streamlined processes aimed at reduced cost and improved quality. These reductions have been primarily in the support services area and comprise around 1595 full time posts whose functions have been discontinued and 5 posts which have been transferred to contractors.

5. I hope you will find this information useful.

Letter from Richard Kirby to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

I have been asked by the Minister for Defence Procurement to reply to your Parliamentary Question about Defence Agency job losses. As the Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA) I can brief you on the aspects affecting this area of business.

I am pleased to say that the formation of the DCTA, on 22 November 1994, has not generated any job losses, either internally or in the private sector. Planned future re-structuring of the Agency, collocating to a single site in early 1996, together with the requirements of Defence Cost Study exercises will however undoubtedly lead to a streamlining of the business structure which in time will lead to a number of posts being lost within the organisation. We would expect these changes to be achieved through natural processes, without redundancy.

Letter from Tweedie M. Brown to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your question about jobs transferred to agencies in the past 2 years.

As of 1 March 1995, the Defence Postal and Courier Services Defence Agency had 487 military and civilian personnel in post. This is a reduction, in the past 2 years, of 33 of which 23 were taken over by contractors.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: AGENCIES AND JOB lOSSES

I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence as to the number of jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared, as it affects my Agency.

There has been a reduction of nine posts—5 UK based Civilians and 4 locally engaged employees in the Disposal Sales Agency as a result of contractorisation of the sales disposal function in Germany.

Letter from G. H. Wilson to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your PQ 7171G.

In response to your request to list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in the Ministry of Defence in the past two years, the Duke of York's Royal Military School has lost the following:

(a) 0.5 (Steward). Taken over by contractor.

(b) 1.5 (Housemaids). Disappeared.

(c) 1.0 (Instructor Officer). Disappeared.

Letter from S. Parnell to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION—PQ 7171G

You recently asked The Secretary of State for Defence to list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

During the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1995 the number of staff directly employed by the Hydrographic Office Defence Agency has reduced by 29. No jobs were lost to contractors. All reductions are ascribed to efficiency improvements.

Letter from Alan Pollard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION—AGENCIES AND JOB LOSSES

The Logistic Information System Agency was formed on 21 November 1994. No jobs were lost or transferred to a contractor upon formation.

In accordance with the Government's Competing for Quality programme we are considering how best to carry out our "non-core" activities. Current proposals envisage the transfer of these activities to a civilian partner. If this is followed through we see about 150 posts being transferred. The final numbers are not yet firm. Following transfer all transferred staff will continue to work on our sites under a "Government Owned Contractor Operated" (GOCO) arrangement, although the GOCO status will be reviewed at an appropriate time. We have no plans to cut the remaining staff in the Agency.

Letter from Martyn Bittleston to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

On behalf of the Chief Executive, who is out of the country at the moment, I have been asked to amplify the Minister's response to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning contractorisation.

In the Meteorological Office

a. No jobs have been taken over by contractors in the past 2 years.

b. The total number of jobs has fallen from 2526 to 2299 in the 2 years to 31 March 1995. A net loss of 227.

Letter from Brigadier A. J. Hoon to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 3 April 1994:

I understand that you have asked the Secretary of State for Defence to list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years. Acting on behalf of the Chief Executive of Military Survey I have been asked to reply with regard to this Agency.

As a Defence Agency, remaining in the defence chain of command, I can identify no job losses to Military Survey in the past two years.

Letter from W. S. Graham to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

1. The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question concerning jobs that have been lost to Agencies in his Department for the past 2 years.

2. My response to your 2 part question is as follows:

a. There are no jobs in the NARO Defence Agency that have been taken over by contractors.

b. The size of workforce of this Agency is task related and is therefore subject to minor fluctuations, but has however increased overall in the past 3 years.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question No. 7171G about Agencies and Job Losses.

At Queen Victoria School no jobs have been taken over by contractors or lost in the past 2 years.

I hope this answers your question satisfactorily but if there is anything on which you would like me to elaborate please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Air Vice-Marshall R. H. Kyle to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he would list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared.

The Maintenance Group Defence Agency manpower figures have reduced progressively for several years. The average figures for each year are reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts. Figures taken from the last three reports, together with the latest available figures, are:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1 February 1995
Service	7,500	6,800	6,634	4,760
Civilian	6,100	6,000	5,679	4,575
Total	13,600	12,800	12,313	9,335

A major reorganisation within the Ministry of Defence took place on 1 April 1994. As part of this process, 1,978 Service and 947 civilian posts were transferred from the Maintenance Group Defence Agency to another area.

There have been no jobs within the Agency that have been lost to contractors in the past 2 years. The other reductions in jobs that have occurred have been as a result of efficiency savings and the effects of the ending of the Cold War.

Letter from David Rennison to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 4 April 1995:

I write on behalf of the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment (RAFSEE) in response to your Parliamentary Question No. 7171G to the Secretary of State for Defence.

Since becoming a Defence Agency on 22 November 1994 no jobs have disappeared or been taken over by contractors.

Letter from I. S. Mitchelson to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

1. I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the jobs that have been lost from Agencies in the past two years—in this instance with particular regard to Children's Schools (North West Europe) Defence Agency.

2. This Agency has:—

(a) had no jobs taken over by Contractors; and

(b) lost 492 teaching posts (inclusive of UK based/locally enrolled, full time equivalent) in the last two years as a result of the Drawdown of British Forces in Germany and the subsequent closure of schools and falling rolls at those remaining. Additionally there has been a loss of 311 locally employed non-teaching staff. These figures reflect the last two years, beginning 1 April 1993.

Letter from Air Vice-Marshal J. A. G. May to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION No. PQ7171G

—TRAINING GROUP DEFENCE AGENCY REPLY

The Minister of State for Defence Procurement has asked me to reply to the question you asked of him in respect of Defence Agencies and Job Losses.

I am able to tell you that no Training Group jobs have been transferred to contractors since the launch of Training Group Defence Agency on 1 April 1994. I am able to tell you, too, that no Training Group jobs have "disappeared" since the same date.

I am copying this letter to the Agency's owner, the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Personnel & Training Command.

Defence Equipment

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of each type of (a) ships, (b) ammunition, (c) artillery, (d) missiles, (e) helicopters, (f) torpedoes and (g) aircraft surplus to his Department's requirement have been or are to be sold in the 1994–95 financial year. [15803]

Overseas Contracts

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 218, if he will name the representatives of the Government of Indonesia and the representatives of Her Majesty's Government who signed memoranda of understanding on behalf of their respective Governments in September 1983, March 1984, April 1986 and November 1991; and in each case what positions they occupied as officials or Ministers within those governments. [17053]

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 30 March 1995]: Details of exchanges between Governments are confidential; and it has been the general policy of successive Governments not to reveal details concerning such arrangements without the prior approval of the other Government.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 609, if he will list the exact date of, and the signatories to, each memorandum of understanding signed with the Government of Nigeria since 4 May 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 March 1995]: The answer given in March Official Report, column 609, referred to defence exports-related MOUs. No central record of MOUs is kept by my Department and a comprehensive list could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. MOUs not related to defence exports were signed with the Government of Nigeria on 24 November 1980 and 14 July 1992. It has been the general policy of successive Governments not to reveal details without the prior approval of the other Government.

TREASURY

Financial Services

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he is doing to improve the performance of the British financial services industry in terms of long-term investment in Britain. [16443]

Mr. Nelson: Last year, the Treasury conducted an inquiry into provision of finance for industry entitled "The Industrial Finance Initiative". A summary of our conclusions was submitted to the Trade and Industry Select Committee, and I gave evidence to the Committee on 8 February. I refer the hon. Member to that submission—a copy of which is available in the Library—and in particular to the catalogue of measures since implemented to improve the terms and availability of finance for industry.

Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the costs for the last two years and what are the estimated costs for the current year and the next two years of the Central Chancery of the Orders of Knighthood. [18050]

Mr. Nelson: The figures requested are set out in the table:

1992–93 (Outturn)	1993–94 (Outturn)	1994–95 (Forecast outturn)	1995–96 (Estimate)	1996–97 (Estimate)
605	477	564	669	677

Insignia re-stocking occurs irregularly, according to need.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18488]

(2) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18487]

Mr. Nelson: The table gives the numbers of ordinary written and named day, or priority as appropriate, written questions tabled to Treasury Ministers since 1988–89, and the number of holding answers given to named day and priority questions for each of these Sessions.

Information relating to earlier years and the analysis sought of substantive replies are not readily retrievable and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions tabled to the Treasury

Session	Ordinary written	Named day/priority written	Holding answers
1988–89	1,007	924	530
1989–90	1,162	827	413
1990–91	851	796	298
1991–92	481	485	180
1992–93	1,811	1,373	473
1993–94	1,316	731	245
1994–95[1]	733	470	271

[1] To 5 April.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18942]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18491]

Mr. Nelson: Since October 1992, when arrangements were introduced for printing in the Official Report letters sent to hon. Members by agency chief executives in response to parliamentary questions, chief executives responsible to Treasury Ministers have replied directly to four questions:

1993–94: —
1994–95: 1

In each case, the answers were printed in the Official Report.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18490]

(2) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report. [18489]

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Income Tax

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost to the Exchequer in 1995–96 of extending the 20p band to the point at which it would become the highest marginal rate of tax (a) for half of all income tax payers and (b) for three quarters of all income tax payers. [16820]

Sir George Young: The full year cost at 1995–96 income levels would be about £4.3 billion for half of income taxpayers and about £7.5 billion for three quarters. These estimates do not allow for any behavioural changes which might result from the introduction of the new regime.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income tax revenue was paid by those with the top 10 per cent. of incomes in each year from 1978–79 to 1995–96. [18974]

Sir George Young: The information requested is given in the table.

Shares of total tax liability paid by top 10 per cent.[1]

	Percentage
1978–79	35
1979–80	34
1980–81	35

[1] For years up to and including 1989–90 married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation in 1990–91 husbands and wives are counted separately.

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information provided to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) on 5 May 1994, Official Report, columns 588–92 for (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96, (c) 1996–97 and (d) 1997–98; and if he will revise the figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94. [17429]

Sir George Young [holding answer 31 March 1995]: Available information on income tax payers is given in the table. The increases in taxpayer numbers is largely due to economic growth. In addition, the number of people in work is increasing—United Kingdom work force in employment up 174,000 between December 1993 and December 1994.

Taxpayers by marginal rate: Numbers in thousands

Marginal rate	1992–93	[1]1993–94	[1]1994–95	[1]1995–96

Deregulation

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will be publishing consultation documents on industrial and provident society, credit union and friendly society measures contained in the illustrative list attached to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [19126]

Mr. Nelson: I am pleased to announce that consultation documents proposing amendments to regulations governing the constitutions and activities of these institutions were published today. Copies are being placed in the Library. The effect of the changes will be to ease the administrative burden on societies and unions without removing any necessary protection for their members. Subject to the response, the Government hope to implement the proposals later this year through an order under section 1 of the Act.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of whether Her Majesty's Government are required, under the provisions of the Maastricht treaty, to seek to aim at any specified levels of inflation or of the public sector borrowing requirement; and if he will make a statement. [18152]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Article 103 of the treaty on European Union requires all member states to regard their economic policy as a matter of common concern, but the broad guidelines on economic policy adopted by the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers under article 103(2) are only recommendations. The same applies to the outcome of the excessive deficits procedure set out in article 104c.

The latest broad guidelines on economic policy, adopted by ECOFIN on 11 July 1994, recognised the need to achieve low inflation on a permanent basis and sound public finances. Such aims are consistent with Government's existing economic policy, as were the recommendations under the excessive deficit procedure, adopted on 7 November 1994.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of individuals whose after-tax income will be reduced by the forthcoming restriction of tax relief on mortgage interest at source from 20 to 15 per cent. [17180]

Sir George Young [holding answer 30 March 1995]: About 10.1 million single people or married couples will benefit from mortgage interest relief in 1995–96, all of whom will be affected by the change in the rate of relief.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual value of mortgage interest relief at source to (a) the average standard rate taxpayer and (b) the average higher rate taxpayer, with (i) a £30,000 mortgage, (ii) in a £60,000 mortgage and (iii) a £100,000 mortgage (1) in 1979–80, (2) in 1993–94, (3) as projected for 1994–95 and (4) as estimated for 1995–96 expressed in 1994 prices. [16812]

Sir George Young [holding answer 29 March 1995]: Information is given in the following table.

Much of the reduction in the value of the relief is due to lower interest rates.

Annual value of mortgage interest relief (£)

	[1]1979–80	[2]1993–94	[3]1994–95	[4]1995–96 (in 1994–95 prices)
Basic rate taxpayer with:
£30,00 mortgage	970	590	470	350
£60,000 mortgage	970	590	470	350
£100,000 mortgage	970	590	470	350
Higher rate taxpayer with:
£30,000 mortgage	1,450	590	470	350
£60,000 mortgage	1,450	590	470	350
£100,000 mortgage	1,450	590	470	350

[1] Average higher rate taxpayer assumed to obtain relief at 45 per cent. Average building society interest rate was 12.9 per cent.

[2] Average building society interest rate was 7.9 per cent.

[3] Interest rate of 7.8 per cent. used. This is based on the average building society interest rates from April 1994 to January 1995, and then assuming, by convention, no changes from the current interest rate of 8.1 per cent. Relief at 20 per cent.

[4] Assumes, by convention, no changes from current interest rate of 8.1 per cent. Relief at 15 per cent.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the regulations under the Legal Aid Act 1988 which require that where a person granted legal aid succeeds in recovering a preserved property the legal aid is repayable, with particular concern for those on income support. [17212]

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the interest charged on legal aid assistance. [17213]

Mr. John M. Taylor: When a legally aided person recovers or preserves money or property as a result of the proceedings for which he or she is legally aided, the Legal Aid Board recovers the legal aid costs from that money or property. This is known as the statutory charge. In certain circumstances, enforcement of the charge is postponed. In those cases, simple interest is charged for the length of the postponement at a rate which is currently 8 per cent. per annum. This rate is reviewed from time to time when it seems appropriate to do so in the light of movements in interest rates generally. There are no current plans to change the rates.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money has been paid in legal aid for persons whose cases are being considered by (a) the European Court of Justice and (b) the European Court of Human Rights; and if he will list the number of (1) cases and (2) people involved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have reflected carefully on this inquiry to which my hon. Friend returns, but regret that I must refer him to the answer I gave him on 28 March, Official Report, column 525.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he now plans to take in respect of the provision of legal aid to the nation's richest citizens. [17845]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is now considering the responses he received to the consultation paper, "Legal Aid for the Apparently Wealthy." He will announce shortly the proposals which he intends to take forward.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the cost of civil legal aid for divorce cases for each of the last five years and the estimated cost for the current financial year; and what is the projected cost for the next financial year. [17098]

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not possible to provide the net cost of divorce cases alone. Net expenditure in respect of all civil matrimonial legal aid for each of the five years is as follows:

1989–90: £87.5 million
1990–91: £108.6 million
1991–92: £150.5 million
1992–93: £207.2 million
1993–94: £266.7 million

The net cost of all civil legal aid in 1994–95 is estimated to be £611.1 million and is projected to be £677.8 million in 1995–96.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to restrict the availability of legal aid for divorcing couples and their children; what mechanisms he intends to introduce to allow those adults and children requiring professional legal assistance, rather than the assistance of mediators, for the protection of their interests to get that assistance; and who will be taking decisions about whether people get the assistance of a mediator or lawyer in publicly funded matrimonial cases. [17104]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor will be issuing his Green Paper on legal aid later in the spring. Proposals relating to legal aid in family cases will be covered in that document.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost to public funds of legal aid granted to persons who were not British citizens or resident in the United Kingdom during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information as to an applicant's nationality is not collected and is therefore not available. The Legal Aid Board does maintain a record of applications received from applicants resident outside the United Kingdom, but information on the cost to legal aid of those cases could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Privity of Contract

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to introduce legislation relating to the law of privity of contract; and if he will make a statement. [17240]

Mr. John M. Taylor: It remains the intention of the Government to proceed with legislation in this area as soon as there is a suitable legislative opportunity.

Age Limits (Courts)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the (a) legal lower age limit and (b) customary lower age limit on visitors to criminal or civil courts. [17230]

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no legal age limit for any visitor to a criminal or civil court. People of all ages visit these courts.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super highway. [17728]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Neither my Department, the Lord Chancellor nor I have an Internet electronic mail address. My Department has no current plans to use the Internet but will keep under review the facilities available and their potential use.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotions materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising, and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17629]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Expenditure on all forms of advertising and publicity, and separate figures for recruitment advertising, are given in the table. The recruitment advertising figures are only for recruitment carried out centrally. Recruitment is also carried out locally but costs are not separately identifiable. It is not possible to identify separate figures for the different types of advertising. The figures include costs for the Court Service, which became an agency on 3 April 1995.

Year	Total advertising and publicity[1]	Recruitment advertising	Recruitment as percentage of total
1992–93	51,901	36,209	70
1993–94	126,195	47,744	38
1994–95 (provisional)	152,412	45,341	30
1995–96 (plan)	191,650	52,650	27

[1] Including recruitment.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d), and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising, for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17630]

Mr. John M. Taylor: A list of the non-departmental public bodies and agencies is set out below. In relation to the non-departmental public bodies for which the Lord Chancellor has responsibility, the following information is available:

Legal Aid Board (created in 1989

Publicity budget for publicising the legal aid scheme:

1989–90: £103,000
1990–91: £150,000
1991–92: £132,000
1992–93: £234,000
1993–94: £140,000
1994–95: £185,000

The planned expenditure for 1995–96 is £243,750. No figure has yet been planned for 1996–97. Publicity in this area is carried out, almost exclusively, by way of leaflets and posters for the general public.

Information on recruitment advertisements is available only from 1992–93:

1992–93: £215.731
1993–94: £135,259
1994–95: £252,359 (estimate)

Law Commission Apart from 1992–93, expenditure was all on recruitment

[3] Estimate.

Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct (created in 1991)

The only expenditure has been on newspaper advertising for the recruitment of staff. The figures are:

1991–92: £4,917.19
1992–93: £7,013.36
1993–94: £11,195.98
1994–95: £11,200 (estimate)

The other NDPBs either do not incur such expenditure or the cost is included in departmental figures.

The Lord Chancellor is responsible for four agencies: the Court Service, Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. The Court Service, which came into operation as an agency on 3 April 1995, is covered in the answer to the question about this Department. As the question concerns specific operational matters on which the chief executives of the other three agencies are best placed to provide answers, I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from S. Hutcheson to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 4 April 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary question, listed on 28 March 1995, regarding the cost of advertising and promotional activities.

The Public Trust Office has not spent any money on (a) television or (b) radio advertising since 1979.

Expenditure on (c) newspapers advertising has been limited to the advertising of senior management posts which cost a total of £19,891.58 in 1994–95. Prior to 1994 recruitment was undertaken centrally by the Lord Chancellor's Department and no separate figures are available for the Public Trust Office.

The cost of (d), other promotional materials and activities, including the design and printing the Framework Document, Corporate and Business Plans in 1994 prior to the launch of the Public Trust Office as an Executive Agency, was £10,980. The cost of producing and publishing pamphlets in 1994 (including Charter Statements, explanatory booklets and leaflets sent to our customers) was £37,500. There have been no other promotional activities. Figures for each year since 1979 will have been subsumed within other budgets and the information required can only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

The figures for 1994–95 are those quoted in the paragraph above. The cost of producing Corporate and Business Plans in 1995–96 is currently being researched but is not expected to exceed £5,000. The production and design of Charter Statements, explanatory booklets and leaflets for 1995–96 has yet to be tendered and the cost cannot, therefore, be quantified at present.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: EXPENDITURE ON ADVERTISING

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question relating to advertising by the Public Record Office.

(a)/(b) The Public Record Office has not advertised on television or radio.

The following table shows:

(c) the amounts spent on newspaper advertising;

(d) the approximate amounts spent on other promotional materials and activities;

(e) the totals of (c) and (d);

(f) the proportions of (e) spent on recruitment and advertising.

Year	(c) Newspaper advertising £	(d) Promotional activities £	(e) Total £	(f) Recruitment proportion Per cent.
1986–87	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
1987–88	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
1988–89	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
1990–91	28	Nil	28	100
1991–92	20,666	1,500	22,166	93
1992–93	10,326	1,500	11,826	87
1993–94	77,392	1,500	78,892	98

Information for earlier years is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Our latest estimates for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are:

	1994–95	1995–96
a) television	nil	nil
b) radio	nil	nil
c) newspaper	£70,000	£44,500
d) other promotional	£1,500	£1,500
e) totals	£71,500	£46,000
f) recruitment proportion	98 per cent.	98 per cent.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: EXPENDITURE ON ADVERTISING IN HM LAND REGISTRY

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning total expenditure by HM Land Registry on all forms of advertising for each year since 1979. I can provide the following information:

a) television advertising—nil;

b) radio advertising—nil;

The following table answers your questions c), d), e) and f):

Year	Total advertising costs £	Recruitment per cent.
1979–80	23,696	48
1980–81	5,789	37
1981–82	7,425	46
1982–83	5,160	49
1983–84	3,365	36
1984–85	4,143	43
1985–86	7,470	43
1986–87	12,669	90
1987–88	32,828	99
1988–89	70,226	99
1989–90	36,434	95
1990–91	20,940	96
1991–92	6,342	66
1992–93	15,002	1
1993–94	16,233	0
1994–95 (forecast)	30,000	0
1995–96 (budget)	35,000	0

The Registry's major expenditure on advertising has been for staff recruitment, particularly to meet the property boom of the late 1980's; for advertising in connection with the registration of high value transactions (until 1980); and to give effect to a continuing statutory requirement concerning the replacement of Land and Charge Certificates.

The advertising costs shown in the table all relate to newspaper advertising apart from the years 1992–93 onwards where costs for staging exhibitions and displays are also included. These costs are subsumed within the total budget and cannot be separated.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Jury Service

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what legal grounds a person called for jury service may be excused from jury service; and if he will list the different categories of people who are automatically exempt from jury service. [17097]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Section 9 (1) of the Juries Act 1974 gives a person the right to be excused from jury service if they are among the persons listed in part III of schedule 1 to the Act. The schedule is a lengthy one and a copy will therefore be sent to the hon. Member. The jury summoning officer may also use discretion and excuse a person from jury service if, pursuant to section 9 (2) of the Act, they are able to show good cause as to why they should be excused.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people were called for jury service in each of the last 10 years at (a) the Central Criminal court, (b) Inner London Crown court, (c) Middlesex Crown court and (d) Harrow Crown court; and what percentage of these people were excused from jury service on each of the legal grounds available. [17101]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Divorce

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many decrees absolute were granted in each of the last five years, and what percentage of them were made on each of the five legal grounds for divorce. [17099]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table gives the numbers of divorces in each year from 1989 to 1993, the latest year for which figures are available. It also gives the percentages of these divorces that were based on each of the five facts by which irretrievable breakdown of marriage can be demonstrated. A small proportion of petitions are based on a combination of facts, and this proportion is also shown.

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Number of Dissolutions	150,477	152,927	158,301	159,967	164,556
Adultery (per cent.)	29.26	28.80	28.26	27.59	27.02
Behaviour (per cent.)	44.34	45.37	46.28	46.20	45.32
Desertion (per cent.)	0.74	0.67	0.68	0.64	0.68
2 Year Separation with consent (per cent.)	19.14	18.77	18.58	19.38	20.75
5 Year Separation (per cent.)	6.00	5.86	5.70	5.74	5.81
Combination of Facts (per cent.)	0.28	0.27	0.24	0.22	0.21

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what costings his Department has done on the introduction of a national mediation service; what savings he expects to make by funding mediation services for divorcing couples and their children rather than legal aid; and when he intends to publish these costings. [17102]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to establish a national mediation service. The Lord Chancellor is still examining possible arrangements for the funding of local mediation services in the context of his proposed Green Paper on publicly funded legal services, to be issued later in the spring.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) trained mediators and (b) mediation centres he estimates will be needed to provide the necessary assistance for divorcing couples and their children. [17103]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The decisions which are made about how best to encourage a wider use of family mediation during the divorce process will determine what assessments are made of the numbers of mediators and mediation centres required to meet any additional demand.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18596]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In relation to the headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department and associated offices access and facilities for disabled people are continuously reviewed, and every effort is made to improve them as necessary. We will continue to build on this approach.

The Lord Chancellor has responsibility for the Court Service, the Public Trust Office, Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Public Record Office as executive agencies. As this question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives are best placed to provide the answer, I have asked them to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: FACILITIES FOR THE DISABLED

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your question about facilities for the disabled.

Newly built Crown, county and combined court centres comply with the requirements of Part M of the Building Regulations 1991, which lay down specific levels of access for disabled court users. The policy is that the design of buildings should enable disabled people to gain independent access into and within the building so that they can fulfil their role in the function of that building; this policy covers all building users—visiting public, jury, professionals and all staff engaged in the building.

New court building schemes have a revised Crown Court layout which provides better access to and within a courtroom. A sound enhancement system for the hard of hearing is required as standard in one courtroom in every new building. This is generally provided as an infra-red system which preserves security.

Appropriate facilities are provided for wheelchair users, the hard of hearing and people with impaired sight. These include parking facilities close to entrances, level or ramped approaches close to entrances, good acoustic environments, signage and infra-red hearing aid installations, good quality lighting, the avoidance of hazards along routes, clear layouts and back-up aural information.

It will be necessary to review our estate in the light of the requirements of the Disabled Bill currently before Parliament and the Regulations to be made under it. There will also have to be discussions with disabled people and the organisations that represent them, to ensure that their views are taken into account and that they are informed of any problems there may be with particular buildings.

The Department has some 450 buildings; about a third of these are listed or older buildings and it will not always be easy or even possible to arrange the kind of access that is required. Our managing agents have been instructed to review our Estate and to identify what needs to be done to improve access. On the basis of that information and as part of the ongoing refurbishment programme, every effort will be made, subject to resource and building constraints, to bring our buildings up to the required standard.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: ACCESS FOR DISABLED PEOPLE IN HM LAND REGISTRY

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning the measures taken to facilitate access for disabled people in HM Land Registry. I can provide the following information:

The Land Registry carried out a comprehensive review of all facilities offered for disabled people in 1988. A wide range of improvements, including better means of access, were subsequently carried out. These included the provision of dedicated car parking spaces, the building of ramps, and the installation of electronic doors. Where it was not possible to provide unaided wheelchair access, "service call" facilities were installed.

A further review of facilities has recently been carried out as part of the Registry's response to the "Programme for Action to Achieve Equality of Opportunity in the Civil Service for Disabled People". While the great majority of Registry sites already meet the requirements indicated in the Access Checklist published in the Programme, an action plan is currently being prepared to enhance facilities where required.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from S. Hutcheson to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 4 April 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Departments' response to your Parliamentary question concerning access for disabled people.

Appropriate facilities are provided for wheelchair users which include ramps, handrails, parking facilities near to the entrance and toilets which are accessible to wheelchair users. We also have evacuation chairs for wheelchair users for emergencies such as a fire.

The Public Trust Office is situated in an older building and as parts of it are refurbished we are increasing the numbers of toilets with disabled access.

Letter from Duncan Simpson to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 4 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: FACILITIES FOR THE DISABLED

In the absence of the Chief Executive, who is away on official business, I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question relating to facilities for the disabled at the Public Record Office.

The Kew building, which opened in 1977, incorporated several design features for the disabled. These are:

a) a lift for disabled users;

b) toilets for disabled users;

c) a wheelchair access ramp leading to the public entrance;

d) 5 parking bays for the disabled located at the point nearest to the public entrance;

e) a visual alarm for the fire alarm system.

An extension to the existing building, due for completion in 1995–96, will include the same facilities.

The nineteenth-century Chancery Lane building has been adapted in recent years to improve facilities for disabled users and includes:

a) two wheelchair lifts to allow access from street level to the ground floor;

b) ramped access to the microform reading room;

c) toilets for disabled users;

d) parking for the disabled by prior arrangement

In addition, there are special arrangements to make documents available to wheelchair users in the reading room which allows easiest access for them.

Evacuation chairs are available on both sites for use in an emergency.

The Public Record Office has appointed a Disabled Persons Officer, part of whose job is to ensure that action point in the Office's Equal Opportunities Policy relating to disabled facilities are followed. This includes ensuring that special equipment needs for staff are met.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18438]

(2) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18440]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18439]

(4) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer.

(5) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18441]

(6) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18442]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted only in the form requested at disproportionate cost.

New Technology

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to what extent new technology is being deployed to speed up court work. [18416]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 5 April 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: TECHNOLOGY USED TO SPEED UP COURT WORK

You will know that it is the practice for Chief Executives of Agencies to reply direct to Members of Parliament who have tabled written Parliamentary Questions. As The Court Service became an Executive Agency on 3 April the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has therefore asked me to reply to your question about new technology in the courts.

Several computer systems have been, or are being, introduced into the county courts to speed up court work. For example, the Summons Production Centre (SPC) and the County Court Bulk Centre (CCBC) deal with large quantities of summonses and post-issue process for major plaintiffs, such as the water industry and finance companies. The SPC issued 1.6 million default summonses for fixed amounts, in 1994 and is operated by only six staff. Both the SPC and CCBC are highly automated. As a result, we can guarantee that summonses will be issued and dispatched within 24–48 hours at the SPC and that judgments will be entered and warrants of execution issued within 48 hours at the CCBC.

Electronic links between the CCBC and the 100 largest courts have recently been established. This allows warrant information to be transferred overnight from the CCBC to the local courts so that the warrant can be in the hands of the bailiff the next day.

County Courts also have 'stand alone' computer systems to help with accounting functions for handling suitors' cash payments and for monitoring the progress of warrants. In addition, a new computer system, called CaseMan, is under development and is currently being installed at 6 pilot sites. CaseMan is a database system that will allow court records to be stored and documents to be produced electronically. In due course, CaseMan will be developed to support a wide range of functions including those carried ut by the stand alone systems mentioned earlier.

Finally, in the Crown Court a strategic system was developed in 1989 and has progressively been installed in all Crown Court centres. All centres now have comprehensive support through the Crown Court Support System (CREST) for case progression, listing, accounting and payment of costs.

Public Appointments

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many public appointments, excluding judicial appointments, his Department has made in the last five years; what are the names and positions of the appointees; how many of the positions were advertised; how many of the appointees were on the list held by the Cabinet Office's public appointments unit; and how many of the appointments were made in consultation with (a) the Prime Minister and (b) the Government Chief Whip.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A complete answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Lord Chancellor makes over 1,800 non-judicial appointments to bodies for which he has ministerial responsibility. Of those appointments, over 900 were made in the last five years. The great majority of these were made to the advisory committees on justices of the peace where the appointments field largely consists of those who are already JPs, appointments for which are advertised. The table shows the non-judicial public bodies listed under this Department in the Office of Public Service and Science publication "Public Bodies". Of the appointments made in the last five years, 21 were advertised. In addition, two vacancies for barristers on the Legal Aid Board were advertised in Bar News, a publication distributed to all subscribing members of the Bar. While we have no record of how many appointees were on the list held by PAU, six appointments were of people suggested by the PAU; four were made in consultation with the Prime Minister; and one in consultation with the Government Chief Whip.

Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI)	10

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of the functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18642]

Mr. John. M. Taylor: I am the green Minister for the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The initiatives taken by my Department relate mainly to its environmental impact as a consumer. The Department is continuing and intensifying its efforts to improve energy efficiency. It has an on-going programme to maintain and, where appropriate, upgrade the historic buildings on our estate. It has ensured that the design of new court buildings takes full account of environmental concerns and, in the procurement of goods and services, it takes all reasonable steps to maximise the use of recycled and renewable resources.

I have regular discussions with other green Ministers on the ways of achieving the Government objectives in this area.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Residences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what were the costs for the last two years and what are the estimated costs for the current year and the next two years of (a) expenditure on palaces in occupation of Her Majesty and residences occupied by members of the royal family and (b) gentlemen at arms and yeomen of the guard. [18048]

Mr. Sproat: The total expenditure on the occupied royal palaces since 1992–93 has been:

1992–93: £23.1 million
1993–94: £19.8 million
1994–95: £20.5 million

Estimated expenditure for the next two years is as follows:

1995–96: £20.7 million
1996–97: £20.9 million

Of these totals, expenditure on the gentleman at arms and yeomen of the guard has been or will be:

1992–93: £39,000
1993–94: £55,000
1994–95: £68,000
1995–96: £54,000
1996–97: £55,000

Arts Council

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will list all persons who have served on advisory panels to the Arts Council in each year for the last 10 years giving the bodies, institutions and/or organisations to which they were professionally attached;

(2) if he will itemise all funds distributed by the Arts Council either by grant or as expenses which have gone to a member of any advisory panel, whether directly or to bodies, institutions or organisations with which they are associated, in each year during the last 10 years.

Mr. Sproat: Full lists of the membership of all the Arts Council's advisory panels and of the grants made are published each year in the council's annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Historic information to allow cross referencing between the interests of panel members and grants to individual organisations is only available at disproportionate cost.

The Arts Council has, throughout its history, operated an advisory structure which allows peer group review of the artistic output of the recipients of grants from the council. The arts funding system relies heavily on the advice, experience and expertise of those appointed to these advisory panels. Nominations for membership of panels are sought from a wide range of relevant professional and trade organisations, and the membership of all panels changes regularly. Panel members are not paid, and receive expenses only on a reimbursement basis. It is inevitable that in order to involve people with the requisite knowledge and experience, some panel members will be employed by, or work on a freelance basis for, organisations that receive funding from the Arts Council; the council's procedural and ethical code states:

> "Members of the Council, Boards, Panels and Committees and staff with any interest in, or whose partners have an interest in, an organisation subsidised by, or seeking subsidy from, the Council, should declare this interest whenever that organisation is the subject of discussion and ask the Chairman at what point it would be appropriate for them to leave the meeting".

I understand that the code is rigorously applied. In line with the Government's code of practice for board members of executive non-departmental bodies, the Arts Council is revising its own code of practice from 1 April 1995. The new code contains a full statement of the responsibilities of members and provides for a register of members' interests.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study he is making of the links between conservation area status and listed building status. [16542]

Mr. Dorrell: I announced in my speech to the Architects' Journal centenary dinner on 8 March that the heritage Green Paper I intend to publish later this year will consider the interaction between listing and other statutory controls, including those relating to conservation areas.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study he is making of a more open listed buildings system; what sources of information are available to his Department; and what proposals he has to initiate information-gathering about listed buildings other than from English Heritage. [16544]

Mr. Dorrell: I recently announced that I was introducing public consultation on listing proposals for post-war buildings and those arising from other thematic studies carried out by English Heritage. The possibility of extending consultation to other types of listing will be discussed in a heritage Green Paper which I will publish later this year.

Documentary information on buildings proposed for listing is available from a number of published sources including the national monuments record, and from inspections made by English Heritage. In deciding whether to list a building I take into account any information, from whatever source, which is relevant to the assessment of the building's architectural or historic interest. I hope that the new arrangements for public consultation will enable owners and members of the public to contribute to the process of appraisal.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what criteria he has for the commercial disposal of listed buildings; and what obligations apply in respect to the need to obtain the highest price. [16541]

Mr. Dorrell: The terms of disposal of listed buildings are ultimately a matter for the individual vendor. However, so far as the disposal of Government historic buildings is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) on 8 March Official Report, columns 174–75, in which I announced the publication of a new guidance note for Departments. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to introduce more flexibility into listings of grade II listed buildings. [16540]

Mr. Dorrell: I propose to publish a Green Paper later in the year which will invite public discussion of the need of greater flexibility. Among the possibilities which may be worth considering is a more selective approach to the listing of buildings already protected by conservation area designations; and a new power to list only the exteriors of certain buildings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he hopes to legislate to require Departments to obtain consent from the local planning authority for the demolition or alteration of listed buildings, and for the demolition of unlisted buildings in conservation areas along the lines he announced at the centenary dinner of the Architects' Journal.

Mr. Dorrell: Legislation will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are his Department's responsibilities in relation to the Forth rail bridge. [16543]

Mr. Dorrell: Questions relating to the Forth rail bridge's importance as a historic structure are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Canoeing and Angling

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the grant available from the Sports Council and other public bodies in support for canoeing in the year 1993–94, expressed in terms per capita of those participating in this sport; and what are the corresponding figures for the sport of angling. [16859]

Mr. Sproat: In 1993–94, canoeing governing bodies received grants of £542,266 from the Sports Council, a sum of £5.42 on a per capita basis for the 100,000 people who take part in the sport. A further £16,875 was also provided in awards from Sportsmatch, a business sponsorship incentive scheme for sport launched by the Government in 1992 to increase the amount of business sponsorship going into grass roots sport and physical recreation. In 1993–94, Sports Council grants to the governing bodies of angling was £74,415, a sum of 2.8p on a per capita basis for the 2.7 million adults actively participating in the sport. In addition to this, £4,211.10 was provided in Sportswatch awards.

Lottery Scratch Cards

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he plans to compensate those charitable organisations which have lost funding previously raised through lottery or scratch card schemes as a result of competition from the national lottery. [18871]

Mr. Dorrell: Charitable, voluntary and benevolent organisations will be able to apply for funds from the National Lottery Charities Board, which will receive 20 per cent. of the national lottery's contribution to good causes. This could amount to more than £300 million a year when the lottery reaches it peak. In addition, many of the applicants for funds from the other lottery distribution bodies are themselves charities. I therefore expect that a high proportion of the money distributed from the lottery will go to the benefit of the charitable sector.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17619]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department's spend in the period 1992–95 for (a) to (c) was nil. Publicity expenditure for 1993–94 was £25,000 and £57,000 in 1994–95; the 1992–93 figure is not available. Publicity plans for 1995–96 have not been finalised.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18594]

Mr. Dorrell: My Department wishes to promote access for all people, including disabled people, to the whole range of the activities for which it is responsible. The Department has an equal opportunities policy which covers all staff including disabled people, and its buildings are accessible to wheelchair users and people with other disabilities.

My Department's agencies have both taken positive action to help disabled people. The Historic Royal Palaces Agency has provided wheelchair access to the crown jewels, and additional lifts to all floors in Hampton court palace, where a wheelchair loan service is also available. The Royal Parks Agency is implementing long and short-term projects for improving access to its parks. These include the wheelchair loan service in Greenwich park and the special needs centre in Richmond park.

The Department and its agencies will continue to build on this kind of approach.

The Disability Discrimination Bill, which will apply to all Government Departments, contains new rights for disabled people in employment and creates rights of access to goods, facilities and services. It also establishes the National Disability Council to advise the Government on eliminating discrimination against disabled people.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18330]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 April 1995]: In the past two years no jobs in my Department have been taken over by contractors and/or disappeared.

Publicity

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000. [14594]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 March 1995]: Expenditure by the Department of National Heritage on publicity during 1993–94 was £25,000 and for 1994–95 was £57,000. Corresponding expenditure for these years by the Royal Parks Agency was £61,400 and £45,000, and by the Historic Palaces Agency £226,300 and £451,300.

No privatisation-related expenditure has been incurred. The Historic Royal Palaces Agency produced one publicity campaign costing over £50,000, in respect of the launch and promotion of the new jewel house at the Tower of London in 1994.

Budgets for 1995–96 are still being finalised. The other information requested could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what dates he has met (a) the Library Association, (b) the Museums and Galleries Commission, (c) Equity, (d) the Musicians Union, (e) the Association of British Orchestras, (f) the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, (g) the Association of District Councils and (h) the Association of County Councils to discuss the work of his Department. [18149]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Since my appointment I have held meetings with:

i) the Library Association on 3 October 1994;

ii) the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 30 November 1994, 24 January 1995 and 8th March 1995;

iii) the Association of County Councils on 28 September 1994.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what dates he has met (a) the Art Council, (b) English Heritage, (c) the Crafts Council, (d) the Design Council, (e) the National Campaign for the Arts, (f) the Royal Institute of British Architects, (g) the Royal Society of Arts and (h) the regional arts boards to discuss the work of his Department. [18148]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Since my appointment I have held meetings with representatives of:

i) The Arts Council and individual Regional Arts Board (frequently);

ii) English Heritage (frequently);

iii) the Royal Institute of British Architects on 25 October 1994;

iv) the National Campaign for the Arts on 3 October 1994;

v) the Royal Society of Arts on 23 February 1995.

Royal Residences

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost to his Department of maintenance and running costs of (a) Buckingham palace, (b) Windsor castle, (c) Kensington palace, (d) St. James's palace, (e) Balmoral and (f) Sandringham in each of the last five years including periods when they were unoccupied; and what proportion of these sums is represented by employees' salaries. [16920]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The cost to my Department of maintenance and running costs of Buckingham palace, Windsor castle, Kensington palace, St. Jame's palace, Balmoral and Sandringham has been as follows:

£ million

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Buckingham palace	7.53	6.56	5.47	6.62
Windsor castle	11.05	12.18	9.75	7.94
Kensington palace	0.84	0.64	1.11	1.36
St. James's palace	3.23	2.42	2.04	3.15
Balmoral	0.06	0.05	0.07	0.06
Sandringham	0.07	0.05	0.07	0.06
Costs that are not attributable by location	1.16	1.26	1.29	1.35
Total	23.94	23.16	19.80	20.54

The expenditure for Sandringham and Balmoral comprised costs incurred when Her Majesty the Queen was in residence on official duties; these two properties are not maintained by my Department.

Expenditure records are not available to my Department for the periods before 1991–92.

Not all salary costs are attributable by individual location. The total salary costs across the whole estate expressed as a percentage of the total grant in aid were as follows:

Per cent.

1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
7.7	12.2	16.2	16.3

The increase in salary costs between 1991–92 and 1992–93 reflects the transfer of staff from PSA to the new property section. The increase between 1992–93 and 1993–94 principally reflects the setting up of the fire, health and safety branch following the Windsor castle fire.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what targets he has for withdrawing regulations within his Department. [15550]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 27 March 1995]: A reply by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs in response to a similar question from my hon. Friend on 27 March, Official Report, column 473 sets out the targets across government. In my Department, our targets for deregulation include:

to complete a review by 1995 of the Tourism (Sleeping Accommodation Price Display) Order 1977 and Hotel Proprietors' Act 1956; to complete a review by 1995, with a view to the abolition by 1996, of the requirements for television dealers both to register as such with the BBC and to hold a valid dealer demonstration licence; to bring forward proposals on media ownership rules;

to commence reviews on sports ground safety legislation and the legal deposit arrangements for books published in the UK; and to continue to press its concerns on a number of regulations affecting the tourism industry.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15618]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 27 March, Official Report, column 435.

VE-day Commemorations

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if veterans from Caribbean countries have been invited to take part in VE-day celebrations. [18142]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

The Government very much hope that those heads of state of Government from the Caribbean who have been invited to London for the VE-day commemorations, will be accompanied by second world war veterans from their countries. We have also contacted associations representing Caribbean veterans resident in the UK, and invited nominations to attend the various commemorative events. In addition, we envisage that veterans from the Caribbean will play a significant role in the commemorations to mark the 50th anniversary of VJ-day in August.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Arms Embargo

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General if he will refer the conduct of the former directors of the British Manufacture and Research Company to the Director of Public Prosecutions for her to consider an investigation into possible breaches of arms embargo with Iran. [18611]

The Attorney-General: Investigation of possible breaches of export controls on arms is a matter for the commissioners of Customs and Excise to whom any information on alleged breaches should be passed.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18586]

The Attorney-General: The equal opportunities policies of the Departments for which I am responsible support the provision of facilities for disabled members of staff and visitors. Wherever practicable, premises are made accessible to disabled people and their needs and comfort are taken into account. Measures taken and facilities offered include the provision of disabled toilet facilities and ramps to provide access to buildings. Where possible, car parking spaces have been designated. The Department's policies will be reflected in the design specifications for new buildings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mining Subsidence

18. Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Coal Authority to discuss coal mining subsidence. [16454]

Mr. Page: My Department is in frequent contact with the Coal Authority about the range of issues within its responsibilities.

Chemical Weapons Convention

21. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to bring forward legislation for the early ratification of the chemical weapons convention; and if he will make a statement. [16457]

Mr. Taylor: The legislation needed to enable the United Kingdom to ratify the chemical weapons convention will be introduced as soon as practicable. In judging when that may be, we shall, of course, take account of the offer of full co-operation made by the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) in business questions last week.

Deregulation

22. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will initiate a league table for all Government Departments to show the number of rules or regulations which have been replaced on a monthly basis. [16458]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No. I do not think that this would be a helpful way of assessing progress, particularly given that the deregulation initiative goes wider than simple repeals.

Cadbury Committee

23. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps have been taken to encourage the implementation of the Cadbury committee proposals. [16459]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My Department has consistently made clear its support for the Cadbury code to those responsible for its implementation.

Business Links

24. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many business links have been established to date. [16460]

Mr. Heseltine: There are currently 75 business links operational and approval has been given for a further 146.

27. Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the network of business links to be completed. [16463]

Mr. Heseltine: There are currently 75 business links open, a further 146 have been approved and there remain only 17 areas to come forward to the national assessment panel.

Progress has been good with over two thirds of the network now approved. By the end of 1995, there will be around 200 outlets operational and every firm in England should have access to a business link.

Manufacturing Industry

25. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the President of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry. [16461]

Mr. Heseltine: I, and other DTI Ministers, regularly meet the Confederation of British Industry. The latest figures show manufacturing output up 4.3 per cent., productivity up 4.6 per cent. and exports up 14 per cent., on a year earlier.

26. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has for manufacturing growth in the east midlands. [16462]

Mr. Page: While my Department does not commission or produce such estimates, recent surveys by the CBI and other economic analysts show sustained growth in the region in 1994 and good prospects for 1995. For example, the latest economic survey by east midlands chambers of commerce and industry shows that in the last quarter of 1994, 51 per cent. of businesses experienced improved home orders, 42 per cent. showed improved export orders, 42 per cent. planned investment in new plant and machinery and 68 per cent. were confident of improved turnover in 1995.

Telecommunications Companies

29. Mr. Waller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with representatives of the United States Government about opportunities for British telecommunications companies to compete in the American market. [16465]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government strongly support the efforts of United Kingdom telecommunications companies to enter the United States and other markets, and we take every opportunity to press for their interests.

My officials have regular contacts with United States regulatory authorities to pursue policy issues of interest to UK companies. Most recently, I spoke to the US Secretary of Commerce in the margins of the G7 conference in Brussels on 25 to 26 February to get across the need for the US to support worldwide liberalisation and removal of restrictions on foreign ownership of US telecommunications operators. I am pleased to say that, at that conference, Vice-President Gore confirmed that they would be pursuing both objectives.

Pit Closures

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent meetings he has had with R. J. Budge, chairman of RJB Mining, to discuss the closure of pits. [16466]

Mr. Eggar: My colleagues and I have had no meeting with Mr. Budge to discuss colliery closures.

Manufacturing Investment

31. Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of gross domestic product was invested in United Kingdom manufacturing industry in 1993. [16467]

Mr. Page: Manufacturing investment was 2.3 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1993 and 10.2 per cent. of manufacturing output, when measured at 1990 prices.

Industrial Ownership

33. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to retain the ownership of the British car, aerospace and telecommunications industries in United Kingdom hands. [16469]

Mr. Eggar: The Department's objective is to increase the competitiveness of businesses in Britain, regardless of their ownership. We welcome overseas investment in these as in other industries. Any acquisitions in these sectors from UK or foreign companies are treated in exactly the same way under the merger provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Orimulsion

34. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the growth in imports of orimulsion and what assessment he has made of its consequences. [16470]

Mr. Page: Imports of orimulsion began in December 1990. There was strong growth in 1992, but imports have remained fairly stable since then. In 1994, imports were 1.2 million tonnes. Figures for use of orimulsion are published in "Energy Trends", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

The future use of orimulsion is a commercial matter for the companies concerned, which will have to comply with requirements of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Late Payment

32. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from trade associations about the problem of late payment of invoices. [16468]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am not aware of any recent representations from trade associations on the problems of late payment of invoices.

35. Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his plans to deal with the problem of late payment. [16471]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Following consultation with the business community, the Government announced a package of new measures to address late payment in the May 1994 White Paper on competitiveness. Work on these continues.

The Government also announced that they would re-examine the case for a statutory right to interest on overdue debts in two years if there has been no significant improvement.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to deal with the problem of late payments for businesses. [16433]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Following consultation with the business community, the Government announced a package of new measures to address late payment in the May 1994 in the White Paper on competitiveness. The measures include:

Government Departments and their agencies to comply with the CBI prompt payers code, to state whether they have done so and publish their payment policies in their annual reports and to publicise their arrangements for handling complaints of late payment.

streamlining of court procedures for debt recovery and a review of the limit for the informal small claims procedure; implementation of proposals to require public companies to state their payment policies in their director's reports; development of proposals for a British standard for prompt payment; work with trade associations, business links and others to improve credit management and debt collection skills in small firms.

The Government also announced that they would re-examine the case for a statutory right to interest on overdue debts in two years if there has been no significant improvement.

Export Promotion

36. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with his counterpart in the MOD concerning the promotion of British exports. [16472]

Mr. Needham: There is frequent contact at both ministerial and official level between my Department and the Defence Export Services Organisation, who work together closely on defence export issues.

Industrial Development, Merseyside

37. Mr. Loyden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encourage the development of industry in Merseyside. [16473]

Mr. Page: We are continuing actively to encourage industrial development on Merseyside by working with local partners to attract new industry and to foster the growth and improve the competitiveness of indigenous enterprise.

Firework-related Injuries

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many firework-related injuries were referred to hospitals in the period around 5 November 1994.

Mr. Heseltine: Accident and emergency units in hospitals in England, Wales and Scotland treated 1,574 people for injuries caused by fireworks. That is an increase over the total reported for 1993. An analysis of the figures for 1994 and for the previous four years will be placed today in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

It is of concern that firework injuries should have increased, that there were two accidental deaths, and that almost 500 of the injuries appear to have been due to illegal misuse.

My Department is in touch with representatives of the fireworks industry and of enforcement authorities to discuss ways in which fireworks injuries can be reduced.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the latest statistics on firework incidents and injuries. [18975]

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins).

Insolvency

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to announce proposals for a revised company voluntary arrangements procedure following the consultation on the document "Company Voluntary Arrangements and Administration Orders" issued by the Insolvency Service in October 1993. [19212]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have today issued a further consultative document outlining proposals for a new company voluntary arrangement procedure which has been developed in the light of the first consultation exercise. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Our earlier consultation revealed a broad consensus that there should be a short moratorium to allow financially troubled companies a breathing space during which to put together a rescue plan. That view, however, was qualified by concerns about how to safeguard assets during that period.

The scheme set out in this consultative document would allow companies a 28-day moratorium with the minimum of formality. This would give companies in financial difficulty temporary protection from their creditors during which they could put together a rescue plan for agreement by creditors. The scheme also proposes various safeguards to protect lenders and other creditors and to discourage abuse. Comments are sought by 31 July 1995.

I am also arranging for a summary of the responses to the first consultative document to be published and copies will shortly be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Government are still considering issues relating to the proposal for a debt equity mechanism and whether any other measures should be taken to facilitate administrations.

Telecommunications Report

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1994, as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984. [19213]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Yes. The 11th report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1994. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17733]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Some 2,000 of the Department's staff can currently be contacted via Internet/X400 service email. For this reason, it is not practicable to list all the addresses. This number will rise to 5,000 over the next 18 months as our office automation programme—OSPREY—is fully implemented. All Ministers will be added to OSPREY during this summer's recess. In the meantime, my own Internet account is taylor@mintech.demon.co.uk.

I have instigated a programme to consider and develop the Department's usage from a strategic perspective, which will consider the potential for full Internet access from OSPREY workstations, along with the creation of a data server dedicated to supply departmental information to the Internet community.

The Department's approach to the information super-highway has been set out in evidence to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry and in debates in the House, as well as in the Command Paper, dated November 1994 which is on the Internet at http://www.open.gov.uk/dti/broadband-comms/anx-9.htm.

Raytheon Plant, Broughton

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken to persuade the president of Raytheon to reconsider his decision to close the Raytheon plant in Broughton. [17836]

Mr. Heseltine: Ministers at the DTI and the Welsh Office have met the president of Raytheon and have written to the company. The UK work force at Raytheon and local interests at Broughton have been kept in touch.

Privatised Utilities (Pay Increases)

Mr. Olner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on pay increases for executives in privatised utilities since privatisation. [16448]

Mr. Eggar: Pay increases for executives in the privatised utilities are a matter for the companies and their shareholders and not for the Government.

Coal Gasification

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support his Department is giving to research into the development of coal gasification for the purposes of power generation. [16858]

Mr. Page: My Department views the development of coal gasification for the purpose of power generation as a major element of its clean coal technology R and D programme, which was detailed in energy paper 63 last October. My Department encouraged the formation of an industry-led consortium known as the clean coal power generation group to take forward, with Government assistance, further activities in coal gasification. This consortium consists of GEC Alsthom subsidiaries European Gas Turbines, Stein Industrie and EVT together with PowerGen, Babcock Energy and British Coal's coal technology development division. The initial objective of this consortium is to take forward a power generation technology known as the air blown gasification cycle to a point where its individual components are fully developed. This technology is fully described in a brochure entitled "Towards Cleaner Coal Power Generation" which, along with energy paper 63, can be found in the Libraries of the House. There are currently in excess of 40 projects under way within this and related coal gasification initiatives to a total project value of over £74 million. The DTI contribution to this work is approximately £14 million.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18655]

Mr. Page: My right hon. Friend President of the Board of Trade has designated me as the Department's green Minister. The latest outline of the Department's environmental initiatives appear in the expenditure plans report for 1995, Cm 2804. There are close and frequent consultations between Departments on matters of common interest. Representations made by my Department on environmental matters, including the Environment Bill, are consistent with the Department's objectives of stimulating an effective business response to environmental developments and ensuring that the Government's overall environmental policy takes proper account of the impact on business.

Electromagnetic Compatibility Directive

Dr. Spink: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the expected role of the trading standards inspectors, with regard to enforcing the European Union EMC directive 89/336/EEC; and, in particular, what measures will be taken to ensure that the directive will not be enforced differently in different EU nations. [17417]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Local authority trading standards officers are the principal enforcement agents in the United Kingdom for the electromagnetic compatibility directive, 89/336/EEC. It is expected that they will follow a predominantly complaints-driven enforcement policy and that they will combine market surveillance under this directive with enforcement of other existing, related legislation, such as the low voltage directive, 73/23/EEC.

Administrative co-operation between national enforcement agencies is being developed to facilitate consistency of application throughout the EU. My Department's single market compliance unit will advise and assist, where possible, UK businesses facing barriers to trade within the Union.

Dr. Spink: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a positive pre-compliance test would comply with the European Union EMC directive 89/336/EEC.

Mr. Ian Taylor: It is for manufacturers to decided how best to comply with the electromagnetic compatibility regulations which implement the EMC directive. Pre-compliance, diagnostic, testing can give a manufacturer a degree of confidence that his product will not breach agreed levels of electromagnetic radiation but the manufacturer cannot be sure of complying with the law if he chooses not to test an example of the finished product. Harmonised European standards provide the clearest route by which a manufacturer can self-certify his products as complying with the essential protection requirements.

Dr. Spink: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the expected total cost of implementing and subsequently enforcing European Union directive EMC 89/336/EEC (a) to Her Majesty's Government and (b) to United Kingdom industry and distribution; and what assistance United Kingdom industry and distribution can expect to help them to implement the new directive. [17418]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The cost to central and local government of implementing and enforcing the EMC regulations is expected to be low since enforcement will be undertaken by local authority trading standards officers, as part of their existing role concerning electrical safety.

For manufacturers, it has been estimated that between 2 and 5 per cent. could be added to design costs, although the cost should decline as the proportion of designs taking account of EMC requirements from the outset increases. Technical assistance has been made available to industry via an extensive EMC awareness campaign, including oral advice; guidance publications; articles in technical and trade press; and the formation of 15 regional EMC clubs to help companies understand the legal, technical and business aspects of the directive.

House Collapse, Kidsgrove

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will request the Coal Authority to investigate the causes of the house collapse on 28 March in Kidsgrove, Stoke on Trent; and if he will make a statement. [17787]

Mr. Page: The Coal Authority is currently investigating the cause of this occurrence.

Privatised Utility Companies

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those privatised utilities which, according to the estimates of his Department, have been able to reduce bills to United Kingdom consumers as a result of overseas investment. [16234]

Mr. Eggar: Companies' revenues from any overseas activities are outside the regulated businesses. The money to develop foreign businesses comes from shareholders' funds, not those of UK customers; this means that overseas activities have no effect on UK prices and bills.

Paper (Price)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on changes in the price of paper over the past 12 months; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that these are justified. [18560]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The price of paper is a matter for the commercial judgment of those concerned. I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading has recently considered price increases in the paper products market but has found no evidence to suggest that these were the result of anti-competitive practices. Any evidence of such practices should be brought to the attention of the DGFT.

Nigeria (Visits)

Mr. Wray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Nigeria since June 1993 listing the Ministers and the reasons for the visit in each case; [17778]

(2) if he will list the exact dates of visits by officials in his Department to Nigeria since June 1993 and the reason for the visit in each case. [17784]

Mr. Needham: In accordance with EU measures announced in 1993, there have been no visits by any Ministers from the Department of Trade and Industry during the period specified. Officials from the Department's overseas trade services division have, however, visited Nigeria since June 1993 and the specific dates where available are listed in the table. In each case, the visit was entirely for trade promotion purposes.

Official	Number of visits	Period

Precious Metals (Marking)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if has changed his policy in respect of resistance to moves to permit manufacturers' self-certification under the EU draft directive on the marking of precious metal articles. [17439]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 31 March 1995]: There has been no change of policy. The Government believe that manufacturers' self-certification offers a lower form of guarantee to consumers than independent marking of precious metal articles, as practised by the United Kingdom assay offices. This was made clear in the Council of Ministers' meeting on March 30, when the current draft directive was not accepted.

Arms Exports

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures Her Majesty's Government will be implementing to ensure that all future transfers of military, security and police equipment, including dual-use technologies, will comply with the resolution passed by the European Parliament on 19 January in respect of bringing all such transfers within the scope of European export controls and making all such transfers apparent; and if he will make a statement. [17140]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 March 1995]: European Parliament resolutions are not binding on either individual member states or on the Council, although its views are noted. Decisions on arms exports remain a national responsibility.

Mr. Wray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures his Department will be implementing to ensure that all future transfers of military, security and police equipment, including dual-use technologies, will comply with the European Parliament resolution passed on 19 January. [17786]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok, (Mr. Dunnachie).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the values of loan guarantees of British arms exports in each of the last 10 years. [17525]

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 March 1995]: ECGD support for defence business over the last 10 years is as follows:

Financial year	Value of defence business (£ million)
1985–86	208
1986–87	446
1987–88	197
1988–89	707
1989–90	378
1990–91	640
1991–92	276
1992–93	1,591
1993–94	1,973
1994–95	623

The figures for 1994–95 are provisional pending the publication of ECGD's 1994–95 trading accounts.

PRIME MINISTER

Parliamentary Delegations

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the "Information Bulletin" on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union for the period July 1994 to February 1995, which has been sent to him. [19215]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Mr. Nicholas Ingram

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made to the US state of Georgia regarding the proposed electrocution of a British subject, Nicky Ingram; and if he will make a statement. [17774]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 31 March 1995]: My sympathy is with any family who find themselves in this difficult position. My own views on capital punishment are well known. However, after careful consideration, I am advised that there are no proper grounds for the British Government to intervene. I have therefore not made any representations on Mr. Ingram's behalf.

Ministers (Car Hire)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the rules concerning the use by members of the Government in their official capacity of cars hired from the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [17702]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government car service may provide private car hire facilities for members of the Government where a Government car service car and driver are not available.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, what has been the cost of cars hired from the private sector for the transport of members of the Government for each year from 1987 to date. [17702]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The information as requested is not available.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will hold discussions with the British relatives of Lockerbie victims before taking action on any decision of the United Nations to implement wider oil sanctions against Libya and other actions as a result of the meeting of the American Lockerbie relatives with White House officials. [17857]

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We shall keep representatives of the British relatives of the Lockerbie victims informed of developments at the United Nations concerning sanctions against Libya and continue to take their views into account in considering how to ensure that those responsible for the bombing are brought to justice.

EDUCATION

Microscopes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what response she is sending to the Royal Microscopical Society in respect of its proposal that there should be a microscope in every school. [16375]

Mr. Forth: Officials replied to the Royal Microscopical Society's proposal on 2 March 1995. The reply welcomed the society's initiative and wished it well, while making it clear that it is for schools and local authorities to decide what equipment they need to meet the requirements of the national curriculum. A copy of the reply has been placed in the Library.

Medical Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what specific financial arrangements are in place to assist medical students; and if she will make a statement. [17709]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 4 April.

Pupils

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils there were in (a) local education authorities and (b) grant-maintained schools in each local authority area at January. [18345]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested for 1994, the latest date for which information is available, is shown in the table.

[1] Head count of pupils of all ages.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many three and four-year-olds in each local education authority were (a) in maintained nursery classes and (b) in maintained primary schools in each year since 1990; what percentage of the relevant population each figure represents; and what was the percentage change on the previous year in each case. [18625]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the changes to the funding of each post-16 college between 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what changes are forecast for each college in future years. [18348]

Mr. Boswell: Details of the allocation of funding to colleges are matters for the Further Education Funding Council. I am therefore asking the council's chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Funding Councils

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the cost of abolishing the Universities Funding Council; [18604]

(2) what was the cost of abolishing the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council; [18603]

(3) what was the cost of establishing the Higher Education Funding Council. [18606]

Mr. Boswell: There were no direct costs in abolishing the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and the Universities Funding Council. The two councils occupied the same building in Bristol and were already operating as a joint executive before they were dissolved on 31 March 1993 and re-formed on 1 April 1993 as the Higher Education Funding Council for England. The only direct costs of establishing the Higher Education Funding Council were the £500,000 running costs grant paid in 1992–93 to run the new council alongside those it was to replace.

Office for Standards in Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the costs of establishing Ofsted. [18608]

Mr. Boswell: The establishment of Ofsted was contained within the existing departmental provision for running costs, and was not separately identified. In 1992–93, DFE transferred £8.225 million to the vote of the newly created Ofsted. This covered setting up and running costs from formation on 1 September 1992 until the end of the financial year 1992–93.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in her Department and agencies for which she is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans she has to improve access; and if she will make a statement. [18592]

Mr. Forth: The Department has staff in London and Darlington. The Teachers Pensions Agency occupies specific areas on the Mowden hall site in Darlington, its accommodation being provided by the Department.

Sanctuary buildings in London was designed to be fully accessible to the disabled. The entrance allows for easy access by wheelchair and there are a limited number of parking spaces in the basement for disabled staff. There are lifts to all floors of the building including the basement for use of the car park. There are male and female toilets for the disabled on every floor. The staff training centre at Park gate in Tothill street is housed on a single floor of an older building. A ramp is available to allow for wheelchair access.

The main Darlington office is at Mowden hall. There is level access to the building. Access for disabled people has been improved over the years to provide:

parking spaces specifically for disabled people;

ramps both portable and static where necessary on site;

a reception desk which has been lowered to make it more user friendly;

lifts which are available from the reception area to all floors of the main building; toilets for the disabled which are fitted with emergency alarms; and emergency flashing lights are provided for staff with hearing difficulties.

The staff training centre at Enterprise house in Darlington offers access by a stairmatic chair. There are plans to relocate the staff training centre to the main Mowden hall site by the end of 1995 making it more accessible.

Evacu-chairs are provided on all sites to assist with the evacuation of disabled staff in emergencies.

The Department will be considering what further action could be taken to improve physical access and facilities for disabled staff, as part of its action plan to achieve equality of opportunity for staff with disabilities.

School Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of establishing the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority. [18602]

Mr. Forth: The estimated total cost of establishing the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, including the cost of winding up the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council, is £4.2 million. These costs will be more than offset by recurrent savings on running costs as a result of replacing two bodies with one. Running costs are estimated at £9.4 million in 1994–95 for SCAA, the first full year of its operation, as against £11.3 million for NCC and SEAC in 1992–93, the last full year of their operation.

National Youth Agency

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the cost of abolishing the National Youth Bureau; [18610]

(2) what was the cost of establishing the National Youth Agency. [18609]

Mr. Boswell: No specific cost resulted from the abolition of the National Youth Bureau, as its staff and functions were taken over by the National Youth Agency on its establishment in April 1991. The grant previously paid to the five national youth service bodies including the National Youth Bureau was channelled through the NYA.

In 1990–91, DFE grant to the national youth service bodies was £1.067 million. In 1991–92, DFE grant to the agency was £1.345 million, which comprised a core grant of £1.165 million and additional grant of £0.180 million. The additional grant included funding for initial start-up costs of the agency.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will name the green Minister for her Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18643]

Mr. Robin Squire: I am the Department's Minister with responsibility for green matters.

The Department works closely with other partners in the education system on environmental matters within school education, teacher training, further and higher education and the management of premises. The revised national curriculum, which will come into force for most pupils in September 1995, requires extensive coverage of environmental matters, particularly through scientific and geographical aspects. Recently the Department, jointly with the Department of the Environment, organised a conference on education about the environment which focused on the effective teaching of the environmental aspects of the national curriculum. In the last six months, the Department has issued guidance for schools on solar energy and on energy-saving measures, while guidance on the schools environmental assessment method is in preparation.

In 1993, the Department drew to the attention of further and higher education institutions the report of the committee set up with the Welsh Office to review the state of environmental education in further and higher education in England and Wales. Implementation of the report's recommendations is largely for the institutions themselves, but the Department is currently considering the proposal for monitoring progress nationally.

"Education Means Business—Private Finance in England"

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the costs of (a) publication and (b) distribution of her Department's 1994 publication "Education Means Business—Private Finance in England" were; and how many copies were issued and to whom. [18601]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 3 April, Official Report, column 921.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of establishing the Further Education Funding Council. [18605]

Mr. Boswell: The running cost expenditure of the council for 1992–93, the period in which it was established, was £24.4 million, most of which expenditure was devoted to preparing colleges for incorporation. The council's running cost for 1993–94, which related principally to the administration of the new sector, was £18.8 million. In both periods, the process of establishing the council was assisted by the work of officials within my Department. Figures disaggregating the cost of their contributions to the establishment of the council are not available.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of establishing the Teacher Training Agency. [18607]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department for Eduction spent £67,849 on establishing the Teacher Training Agency. This figure does not include the time spent by officials working on what is now the Education Act 1994. In addition, the Department made available £1,472,151 to the agency in the 1994–95 financial year, which covered further setting up costs as well as the agency's administration.

Education and Youth Ministers Councils

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the outcomes of the Councils of Education Ministers and of Youth Ministers held on 31 March 1995. [19121]

Mr. Boswell: On 31 March, the Council of Education Ministers adopted a resolution on improving and diversifying language learning and teaching within the education systems on the European Union, and reached political agreement to the Council's common position on the Commission proposal to make 1996 the European Year of Lifelong Education and Training.

The Council of Youth Ministers, held on the same day, adopted a resolution on co-operation in the field of youth information and studies concerning youth.

School Finances

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many school governing bodies have set deficit budgets in the current year. [18400]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not collect this information.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list by education authority the total unspent balances in schools at the conclusions of each of the last three financial years. [18554]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the financial year 1993–94, the information requested may be found in the answer given on 1 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), Official Report, columns 614–16. The requisite information for 1992–93 is at present being collated by the Department from the local management of schools outturn statements published by local education authorities for that year, and I will write to my hon. Friend when this work is complete. For 1994–95, the information is not yet available.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many parliamentary questions to her Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which she has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18540]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to her Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which she has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18539]

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by her Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18535]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to her Department requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18536]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 her Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18537]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 her Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question. [18538]

Mr. Boswell: Neither the Department nor the House of Commons POLIS unit collects information in the form requested.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list by education authority the cash balances held at the conclusion of each of the last three financial years. [18553]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information will take a few days to gather. I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will list by education authority in descending order the cash sum per pupil represented by the top slice percentage of the common funding formula. [18069]

(2) if she will list by education authority in descending order the common funding formula top slice percentages. [18068]

(3) if she will list by education authority the amounts agreed by her Department as expenses to be deducted from each local education budget before calculating amounts due to grant-maintained schools under the headings (a) corporate management, (b) service strategy and regulation, (c) premature retirement compensation costs of local education authorities' school staff, (d) other, and (e) the total for (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96. [18070]

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list each non-departmental body and agency for which she has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since 1979–80; and what are her latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17604]

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has responsibility for the following non-departmental public bodies:

Centre for Information on Language, Teaching and Research; Education Assets Board:
Funding Agency for Schools;
Further Education Funding Council;
Further Education Unit—to 31 March 1995;
Higher Education Funding Council for England;
National Council for Educational Technology;
National Youth Agency;
School Curriculum and Assessment Authority;
Special Educational Needs Tribunal;
Teacher Training Agency.

The Department has one next steps agency, the Teachers Pensions Agency.

Operational and managerial matters are the responsibility of the individual body concerned. I have therefore asked the chairman or chief executive of each body to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Letter from Geoffrey Parker to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

I am writing at the request of Tim Boswell, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Further and Higher Education, with information you requested in your recent Parliamentary Question about NDPB expenditure.

The Teacher Training Agency was established last September so the figures below represent the estimated outturn for the period from September 1994 to March 1995. We do not have firm estimates for these items for 1995–96.

Expenditure 1994–95	£000s
(a) Television advertising	Nil
(b) Radio advertising	Nil
(c) Newspaper advertising	44
(d) Other promotion materials and activities	39
(e) Total (a to d)	83
(f) Proportion of (e) spent on recruitment advertising	53 per cent.

I hope this information is helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computer Pornography

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 488, when he expects to receive the report from CCTA on pornography on the Internet; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [17897]

Mr. Horam: I expect to receive a report from CCTA examining all the ethical issues of the Internet, which includes, but also ranges more widely than, pornography, in July. I will place a copy in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18466]

Mr. David Hunt: Since my Department was formed in May 1992, there have been no such instances.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18465]

Mr. David Hunt: Since my Department was formed in May 1992, a total of six questions have been transferred for answer to the chief executives of the agencies of which I am responsible. The figure can be broken down as follows:

1994–95: 4

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18464]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18462]

(3) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18461]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report. [18463]

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18591]

Mr. Horam: The Cabinet Office, the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office have all appointed departmental disabled persons' officers, DDPOs. The DDPOs each work closely with their respective accommodation services to ensure that they are aware of the needs of disabled staff and visitors.

The London estate of the Cabinet Office consists, largely, of historic listed buildings which were not designed with the needs of disabled people in mind. In the light of this the Cabinet Office has commissioned an "access survey" for its London buildings to determine how they can be made more accessible within the constraints imposed by listed building regulations

For each of my Department's buildings, for which we are the major occupier, a number of measures have been taken to improve access and facilities for the disabled within the rolling programmes of building works and refurbishment. These include: provision of designated car parking spaces where car parks exist; introduction of braille buttons in lifts; provision of toilets for the disabled wherever possible within constraints of building lay-out and lease provisions; access ramps to entrances where practical, and availability of escorts within buildings to help visitors who are visually impaired.

We will continue to build on this approach.

Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the Medical Research Council has to initiate research into hypertrophic cardiomyopathy; and if he will make a statement. [17705]

Mr. Horam: The Medical Research Council supports an extensive portfolio of basic and applied research in cardiovascular disease, much of which has direct relevance to the problem of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy. However, none of this is specifically addressing the disease as such.

Although there are currently no plans to initiate research specifically into hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, the MRC is happy to consider applications in this field.

Coronary Diseases

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the coronary diseases researched by the Medical Research Council and the amount spent on each, for the last year for which figures are available. [17706]

Mr. Horam: Following is a list of the cardiovascular diseases researched by the Medical Research Council:

Arrhythmia
Atherosclerosis
Atheroma
Cardiomyopathy
Heart failure
Hypercholesterolaemia
Hyperlipidaemia
Hypertension
Ischaemia
Thrombosis

Owing to the significant overlap of funding covering these diseases, and to the interrelation between the above categories, it is impossible to provide specific figures covering each of the diseases. However, in the last financial year for which figures are available, 1993–94, the MRC spent over £6 million directly on cardiovascular research, and over £16 million on research which may have some relevance to the condition.

Executive Agencies

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks; or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1995 c. 620–21]: The figure for the number of people employed by the COI on contracts of less than 51 weeks is 17—3.4 per cent.—and not zero as originally stated.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18653]

Mr. Horam: I am the green Minister for the Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service and Science, its executive agencies, and HMSO and the Central Office of Information. My Department has an environmental strategy and has updated its supporting action plan for 1995; my Department's non-departmental public bodies have also been invited to support energy savings policies. Details of specific actions taken in support of the Department's strategy are given in the Government expenditure plans for the Cabinet Office, Cm 2820, published on 1 March 1995. My Department is involved in discussions on a number of other environmental issues.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's position in negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty in relation to nuclear tests carried out for safety and reliability purposes. [18112]

Mr. David Davis: We are committed to negotiating a comprehensive test ban treaty with an effective verification system and which commands universal adherence. We are studying how best to meet the continuing need to assure the safety and reliability of our deterrent.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent proposals he has received from other states with regard to the review conference of the inhumane weapons convention. [18114]

Mr. David Davis: There is a wide measure of agreement among our NATO allies, EU partners and others on proposals for strengthening protocol II of the convention concerning anti-personnel landmines. These include the extension of the scope of the protocol to non-international armed conflict; new provisions on self-destructing mechanisms, detectable mines and the marking and mapping of minefields, as well as the protection of humanitarian workers in mined areas; and the inclusion of restrictions on transfers in the protocol.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those states that have ratified the 1981 inhumane weapons convention. [18113]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 27 March, Official Report, column 442. The United States of America has now also ratified the convention.

Royal Visits (Costs)

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the costs for the last two years and what are the estimated costs for the current year and the next two years of (a) the Marshal of the Diplomatic Corps and (b) royal overseas visits at the request of Government Departments. [18051]

Mr. Baldry: The costs borne by my Department are:

(a) Marshall of the Diplomatic Corps

1992–93: £67,552

1993–94: £67,806

1994–95: £63,101 Estimate

1995–96: £68,848 Estimate

1996–97: £71,742 Estimate

(b) Royal visits overseas at the request of Government Departments

1992–93: £455,695

1993–94: £491,845

1994–95: £560,000 Estimate

1995–96: £477,000 Estimate

1996–97: £489,000 Estimate

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the King of Morocco on Libya sanctions. [18092]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs nor I have had recent discussions about Libya with the King of Morocco.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with President Nelson Mandela and other South African leaders about a rapprochement between Libya and the west. [18091]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had discussions with a number of South African leaders during Her Majesty the Queen's recent state visit to South Africa. The South African Government share our concern that Libya should comply with the United Nations Security Council resolutions without further delay.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with President Mitterand the implications of the agreement for large-scale oil exploration rights between the Government of Libya and the French Company Totale for the imposition of United Nations sanctions against Libya. [18199]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 9, if he will enter into discussions with Djibouti and Morocco on their abstention over sanctions against Libya. [18201]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 8, following the emergence of new information about the Lockerbie crime, if he will pursue the Lockerbie investigation further with the Government of Finland. [18205]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 9, if he will specify what the unwarranted criticisms were to which he referred, with regard to the German authorities and the Scottish police in relation to Lockerbie. [18203]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It was reported in the press and media, wrongly, that the German authorities had released Abdul Fatah Ghadanfar before the Scottish police were given an opportunity to interview him and that the Scottish police had not made any efforts to interview him, or his associate Haj Hafez Dalkamouni, in connection with the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 9, if the concerns of Her Majesty's Government about Abdul Ghadanfar were known to the German police before his release from arrest. [18191]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 6 March.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 6, regarding the possible involvement of officials of countries other than Libya in the Lockerbie bombing, if he will name the countries, the possible involvement of whose nationals have been very closely investigated. [18193]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 6, regarding the possible involvement of officials of countries other than Libya in the Lockerbie bombing if he will make available all available evidence which supports charges to the Government of Germany. [18195]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Security Council has endorsed our demand that Libya make the two accused available for trial in Scotland or the United States. It would not be appropriate to disclose the contents of confidential communications with the prosecuting or judicial authorities of other countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 5, if he will specify what were the differences in detail to which he referred, between the story in relation to which Air Malta brought the action and those contained in the warrants for the arrest of the two accused Libyans. [18197]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 6 March.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has conveyed to the German authorities details of the suitcase of white powder, handled by Mr. Wilson, farmer of Tundergarth Farm near Lockerbie in December 1988, about which information was conveyed to him in a letter of 9 February from the Rev. John Mosey. [18183]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No significant quantities of drugs were recovered in the course of the Lockerbie investigation, although some small "user" amounts of cannabis were found. Allegations that a quantity of white powder drugs were found in a suitcase recovered at Tundergarth Mains farm were investigated some years ago in the early stages of the investigation. There was no substance to the allegations and nothing to be conveyed to the German authorities.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 6, what action he has taken to offer Volke Rath, state prosecutor at Frankfurt, additional evidence against two accused Libyans, to enable him to bring proceedings in Germany. [18184]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Security Council has endorsed our demand that Libya make the two accused available for trial in Scotland or the United States. It would not be appropriate to disclose the contents of confidential communications with the prosecuting or judicial authorities of other countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 7, whether the Scottish police asked or suggested to the Bundeskriminalamt or Verfassungschutz that they could directly question Mr. Ghadanfar and Mr. Dalkamouni. [18185]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 6 March.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 9, if he will enter into discussions with Egypt and Sudan about Lockerbie and their opposition to sanctions against Libya. [18202]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have regular contacts with the Governments of both countries on a wide range of issues.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 6, on the consideration of evidence of the involvement of officials of countries other than Libya in the Lockerbie bombing, what new information has been considered since 6 March. [18192]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 6 March.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet Esmat Abdul Meguid and the Arab League on the issue of Libya's position in relation to Lockerbie in the next three months. [18194]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I hope to meet Dr. Meguid in London today.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 6, when he estimates that the issue of the United States decision that the Montreal convention, requiring attempts at conciliation and arbitration, should not be applied in relation to Pan Am 103 and Lockerbie will be heard before the International Court of Justice; and if he will outline the position of Her Majesty's Government. [18196]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The timing of any hearing is a matter for the International Court of Justice. The United Kingdom does not accept that Libya enjoys rights under the Montreal convention in relation to the sabotage of Pan Am 103.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation have been made to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office by Professor Dr. John Buontempo, former Maltese ambassador to Arab countries, in connection with the Lockerbie bombing. [18198]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Professor Buontempo has explained to Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials his personal view that the trial of the two Libyans accused of the Lockerbie bombing should be held in Malta.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's ambassador in Cairo last had discussions with Dr. Meguid, Secretary General of the Arab League, on Lockerbie; and what was the result. [18200]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's ambassador at Cairo has had a number of discussions on Lockerbie with the Secretary General of the Arab League. Dr. Meguid shares our concern that the issue should be resolved urgently, in accordance with the Security Council resolutions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 8, if he will support the proposal by the hon. Member for Eastwood, (Mr. Stewart) to allow the Scottish courts to operate outside Scotland. [18204]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

There is no need for Scottish courts to operate outside Scotland. There are arrangements which allow the evidence of witnesses who are abroad to be taken before a local judge or relayed by direct television link to the courts in Scotland. We have no reason to believe that the Libyans will surrender the two accused for trial before a Scottish court sitting aboard. The Scottish lawyer representing the two accused has most recently suggested trial by a panel of judges headed by a Scottish judge. This is simply the latest in a long line of inappropriate and often contradictory proposals, none of which satisfies the requirement of the Security Council that the accused be produced for trial in Scotland or the United States.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18654]

Mr. Baldry: I am the FCO green Minister for both the diplomatic and development wings.

I have set up an environmental management committee to produce a departmental action plan on green issues affecting the domestic arrangements of the FCO.

Through officials, I have been concerned with reaching an acceptable procedure with the Department of Trade and Industry and Department of Environment for trying to ensure that timber and timber products are purchased from sustainably managed sources.

I have also, through officials, been actively involved in the consultation process with other Government Departments about the Environment Bill.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18598]

Mr. Goodlad: This Department ensures that all new refurbishment projects build in access and facilities for disabled people, apart from areas which are protected on heritage grounds. Disabled staff and visitors have access to all floors of the FCO's main building. There is a wheelchair access to the FCO's only public office in London. Car parking for disabled people is also available.

When planning new building work overseas, the FCO complies with UK and EU building regulations which require disabled access to non-domestic buildings. Where the local standard is higher, the FCO meets local requirements.

The Overseas Development Administration's sites in London and East Kilbride provide disabled access to the buildings, including lifts to all floors. The ODA is considering the installations of stairlifts to two areas of the London office currently inaccessible to wheelchair users.

The Natural Resources Institute's accommodation was checked and approved by the Department of Employment's disablement advisory service in the late 1980s.

Nigeria (Visits)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the exact dates of ministerial visits to Nigeria since June 1993, listing the Ministers and the reason for the visit in each case. [17779]

Mr. Baldry: There has been no ministerial visit to Nigeria since my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey last visited in January 1993.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the exact dates of visits by officials in his Department to Nigeria since June 1993 and the reason for the visit in each case. [17783]

Mr. Baldry: Details of such visits are not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current security situation in Burundi. [17825]

Mr. Baldry: The security situation in Burundi remains volatile. We are deeply concerned about developments and will continue to monitor events closely. We are working with the international community—and with the Secretary General's special representative, Mr. Ould

Abdallah, in particular—to support the moderates from all sides in the Government who have agreed to work towards restoring public confidence and consolidate national reconciliation and democracy.

Ethiopia

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made to whether the Government in Ethiopia is breaching human rights; and if he will make a statement. [15332]

Mr. Baldry: We are concerned about the human rights situation in Ethiopia and take every opportunity to stress to the transitional Government the importance of making real progress in this area.

HEALTH

NHS Executive Publications

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pamphlets the national health service executive has published since April 1991; if she will list for each publication the number published, the title, the recipients and the cost; and what was the total cost. [16167]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 25 February 1993, columns 668-71, and on 21 October 1993, columns 311-14, and to the reply that my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Health gave the hon. Member for Brightside on 28 March 1994, columns 595-96, for information about pamphlets, leaflets and brochures issued by the national health service executive between April 1991 and March 1994. In 1993–94, seven further publications were issued. These were:

Title
Grassroots Issues 1–6	cost £3,814	Issued to Mental Health Carers and Professionals
Creating Compatible Careers	cost £2,350	Issued to reference/nursing libraries, female health professionals on management programmes.

A list of pamphlets and brochures issued in 1994–95 will be placed in the Library shortly.

As a major employer, with responsibility for running a service used by the public, it is important that the NHS should give better information about the range of services it provides.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which she has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year sine 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since 1979–80; and what are her latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17634]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for the Department's non-departmental public bodies could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The chief executives of the Department's four agencies have been asked to reply to the hon. Member on those parts which fall within their areas of responsibility.

Letter from K. Jones To Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 31 March 1995:

Expenditure on Advertising

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, about expenditure on advertising, as part of it falls within my area of responsibility.

The Medicines Control Agency has not carried out any advertising using television, radio and newspapers. Nor has it produced any promotional materials beyond those relating to the Agency's statutory functions. The Medicines Control Agency was established in June 1991 and figures relating to the expenditure on recruitment advertising are available from 1992.

The sums involved are:

1992/93: £14,800
1993/94: £27,701
1994/95: £36,326
1995/96: £45,000 (forecast)

Letter from Alan Kent to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply for the Medical Devices Agency (MDA) to your recent Parliamentary Question about expenditure on advertising and promotional materials and activities.

The MDA was launched on 27 September 1994. Prior to that publicity services were paid for as part of the Department's overall expenditure. Since then MDA has spent £40k on newspaper advertising, to recruit 9 staff. There was no expenditure in this period on television or radio advertising for any purpose.

Spending on promotional materials and activities was £105k in the same period, including publicity material connected with the launch; none was for recruitment purposes.

We are in discussion with the Department about transferring a publicity budget to the Agency for 1995–96, based on last year's spend.

Letter from John Locke to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, as part of it falls within my area of responsibility.

NHS Estates was launched as an executive Agency of the Department of Health in April 1991. In response to your question:

a) and b) No expenditure has been incurred in television advertising or radio advertising.

c) Newspaper advertising spending to date from April 1991 totals £24,500. Totals spent in each year are as follows:

1991/92: not available
1992/93: not available
1993/94: not available
1994/95: £24,5000
1995/96: £12,000 (budgeted)

d) Spending on promotional materials and activities to date totals £693,978.14. Totals spent in each year are as follows:

1991/92: £275,000
1992/93: £164,000
1993/94: £114,450
1994/95: £140,528.24
1995/96: £52,000 (budgeted)

All newspaper expenditure relates to recruitment advertising. Annual recruitment advertising information is only available from April 1994. Prior to this services were provided by the Department of Health. None of the spending on promotional material and activities relate to recruitment.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as part of it falls within my area of responsibility.

The only publicity undertaken by the Agency relates to the NHS Pension Scheme and is directed to NHS staff and employers. We do not advertise on television, radio or in newspapers. Promotional activities undertaken during 1994–95 and 1995–96 were:

representation at 5 NHS Conferences at a total cost of £10,044.00;

the insertion of information about the NHS Pension Scheme in the National Association of Health Authorities & Trusts (NAHAT's) diary at a total cost of £1,327.75; seminars held in England and Wales and booklets printed for all NHS employees about changes to the NHS Pension Scheme Regulations at a total cost of £75,234.32.

We did not engage in recruitment advertising.

NHS Accountability

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to improve democratic accountability in the national health service; and if she will make a statement. [177881]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend) on 17 January, columns 440–42.

Baby Milk Manufacturers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what regulations exist in the NHS on sponsorship by (a) manufacturers of infant formula milk, (b) distributors of infant formula milk and (c) Bounty Services Ltd.; and to what extent these regulations vary between trust and non-trust hospitals; [18399]

(2) if she will list the occurrences in the past 10 years of sponsorship in the NHS by (a) manufacturers of infant formula milk, (b) distributors of infant formula milk and (c) Bounty Services Ltd. [18398]

Mr. Sackville: Advice on commercial sponsorship in the national health service does not distinguish between that provided by the baby milk industry and that provided by other commercial sponsors. No information is available centrally on the sponsorship provided by the baby milk industry to health authorities and trusts.

General advice is contained in "Income Generation: A Guide to Local Initiative", issued under cover of HN(89)9. Advice on commercial sponsorship of posts and of attendance by staff at relevant conferences, courses and other events is contained in HSG(93)5, "Standards of business conduct for NHS staff". Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Section 64 Grants

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the grants given under section 64 for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96. [18409]

Mr. Bowis: Grants totalling £19.663 million were awarded to 369 voluntary organisations in England under the section 64 general scheme during 1994–95. Details have been placed in the Library. Information on grants given during 1995–96 will be made available at the end of that financial year in the usual way.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the National Drugs Advisory Committee working party report on solvent abuse is to be published. [18208]

Mr. Bowis: Shortly.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what authority the salaries of practice managers in general practitioner fundholding are paid. [18914]

Mr. Malone: General practitioners are independent self-employed contractors to the national health service and, as employers, are responsible for the salaries of their staff, including practice managers.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of fundholding practices whose patients are currently not being admitted to hospital for elective surgery because the practices have reached their financial limits; and if she will make a statement. [18257]

Mr. Malone: All national health service purchasers—district health authorities and fundholding general practitioners—are responsible for managing resources, to best meet the health needs of patients. Within this, all emergency cases are seen immediately, urgent cases are placed on a common waiting list and for non-urgent cases, national or local patients charter standards apply.

Listeriosis

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of listeriosis were recorded in each of the past five years; and what were the main causes. [18918]

Mr. Sackville: The number of cases of systemic listeriosis reported to the public health laboratory service in England and Wales in the last five years is as follows:

1990: 115
1991: 127
1992: 106
1993: 102
1994: 115

The main cause of infection in these cases is unknown.

The report of the World Health Organisation informal working group on foodborne listeriosis, concluded that the primary means of transmission of listeria monocytogenes to humans is through contamination of foodstuffs. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Social Services

Mr. David Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is made available via the Liverpool standard spending assessment per child at risk; and what are the figures for (a) Birmingham, (b) Manchester, (c) Wandsworth, (d) Westminster and (e) the English average. [18949]

Mr. Bowis: The figures for the children's social services standard spending assessment per child at risk for 1995–96 are as follows:

England: £15,548
Liverpool: £13,622
Birmingham: £17,285

Manchester: £15,828
Wandsworth: £27,369
Westminster: £31,293

The variation in the figure mainly reflects the variation in the proportion of residents under 18 years in non-white ethnic groups in each of the authorities.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the work that she has commissioned into the children's social services standard spending assessments to be completed; if it will be ready for incorporation into the 1996–97 provisional standard spending assessments settlement; how many people are working on the study; if its findings will be retrospective; and what particular consideration is being given to the Liverpool children's social services standard spending assessments. [18933]

Mr. Bowis: Some exploratory work has been commissioned and shall be completed in May. The timing of any further research depends on the findings of the exploratory work but it is not expected that the research will affect standard spending assessments for 1996–97. One person is currently working part-time on the research. Any findings will not be applied retrospectively. No particular consideration is being given to any single local authority's children's social services standard spending assessment.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she takes of the economic index in determining Liverpool's social services standard spending assessment; what significance she attaches to ethnicity in determining the unit cost in relation to social services care; and what weight is given to economic factors in comparison to ethnicity in deciding the social services standard spending assessment. [18948]

Mr. Bowis: Neither the economic index nor any general economic factors are used in the calculation of social services standard spending assessments. An ethnicity factor is included as it has been shown to be related to the unit cost of children's services.

Dental Services

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to announce the Government's plans for the future of the general dental service following the consultation of the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry." [19125]

Mr. Malone: I am today writing to all dentists in England setting out the Government's proposals for the future of national health service dentistry. Ministers in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices are writing in similar terms to the dentists in their countries.

I am outlining a package of reform that will ensure access to high quality oral health care for the patient, stability for the dental profession and value for money for the taxpayer. These reforms will ensure that the oral health of the nation's children continues to improve. All treatment which is clinically essential will continue to be available in the national health service, as it is now.

As set out in "Improving NHS Dentistry", all present exemptions and remissions from patient dental charges are to remain unchanged. This announcement does not include any changes to the structure or level of dental charges.

"Improving NHS Dentistry" drew on Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's review of dental remuneration and the Health Select Committee's report on dental services. It set out two options for short-term reform of the current system of paying dentists. The first was a system of sessional fees which would reward dentists for the time spent treating NHS patients. This system will not be pursued as a short-term option.

The other option was to reform the current fee-based system of paying dentists and I am today announcing a package of reforms which will achieve this. The package has five components:

(1) The Government's highest priority is to sustain and develop the improvements in child oral health. We therefore intend to improve the capitation system currently in place for the care of children by relating payments to dentists to disease levels in children most in need. Details will be discussed with the profession.

(2) In adult care, we will introduce more rigorous prior approval procedures for monitoring treatment to ensure that the general dental service provides only those treatments which are clinically essential and for which there is no clinically acceptable, less costly, alternative.

(3) We also wish to reform the system of continuing care payments which dentists receive for adults on their lists to ensure better value for taxpayers' money. The continuing care relationship between dentists and patients will remain. We will discuss changes with the profession. If reform proves not to be possible, the Government will reconsider the future of these payments.

(4) We intend to develop the role of the community dental service to meet the needs of patients in areas of the country where there is difficulty obtaining NHS treatment under the general dental service. This will include, subject to Parliamentary approval and the passage in due course of any necessary legislation, allowing the community dental service to levy charges. All charge exemption and remission arrangements that apply in the general dental service will apply equally in the community dental service.

(5) The Government also intend to discuss with the profession the issue of past overpayments under the previous remuneration system and how we can together ensure financial stability in the general dental service. Providing satisfactory progress is made in the fundamental review of dental remuneration, the Government will not rule out waivers of past overpayments.

I reaffirm the Government's aim of introducing a system of local contracts between health authorities and dental practices similar to that which operates elsewhere in the health service. "Improving NHS Dentistry", our Green Paper published last year, noted that such a system would need careful piloting and evaluation before any decision were taken on nationwide introduction. Primary legislation is required to set up pilots. Over one third of local dental committees said that they were prepared to take part in pilot schemes. The Government therefore intend to seek an appropriate opportunity, in due course, for the necessary legislation. Meanwhile, we are keen to work with the profession and other interested groups to develop the proposals further. The system of paying dentists through sessional payments, set out as an option in the Green Paper, can be tested as a part of this pilot scheme.

The Government remain committed to an accessible, high quality NHS dental service and believe that the measures now proposed will provide stability and security for NHS dentistry. They will ensure the correct balance between the prevention and treatment of disease, deliver increased quality of care for patients and promote better use of resources by targeting areas of greatest need.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were deregistered by family health services authority area for the periods (i) 2 July 1992 to 31 March 1993, (ii) 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 and (iii) since 1 April 1994. [18575]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each family health service authority area, and in total, requested help in finding a dentist (i) between 2 July 1992 and 31 March 1993, (ii) between 1 April 1993 and 31 March 1994 and (iii) since 1 April 1994. [18576]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library. Family health services authorities consistently report that they can help patients to find national health service dentists.

Prescriptions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to include mental illness in the list of medical conditions which confer exemption from prescription charges; and if she will make a statement. [17714]

Mr. Malone: None. The list of exempt conditions was, and still is, limited to those which > "need continuous medication for" life

> "long periods and which admit no discretion"

by doctors

> "as to identification of individuals".

The list has been reviewed a number of times since 1968. No changes have been made.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total (a) amount raised from prescription charges (b) the expenditure on the system of NHS prescriptions for medication within the NHS and (c) the difference between (a) and (b) for each financial year since 1979–80. [18252]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Total (a) annual income from prescription charges collected by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors and from the sale of prepayment certificates by family health service authorities; (b) annual expenditure on the family health services drugs bill and dispensing fees; and (c) the difference between (a) and (b) in England 1979–80 to 1993–94

£ million

Year	(a) Income from prescription charges and prepayment certificates	(b) Expenditure on FHS drugs bill and dispensing fees[1]	(c) Difference between (a) and (b)
1979–80	39	790	751

1992–93	242	3,299	3,057
1993–94	265	3,628	3,363

Total (a) annual income from prescription charges collected by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors and from the sale of prepayment certificates by family health service authorities; (b) annual expenditure on the family health services drugs bill and dispensing fees; and (c) the difference between (a) and (b) in England 1979–80 to 1993–94 £ million

Note:

[1] Includes the cost of prescriptions written by general medical practitioners and general dental practitioners and the remuneration paid to community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors for dispensing them. Excludes the cost of prescriptions written by hospitals for out-patients and dispensed by community pharmacists.

NHS Executive Business Plan, 1995–96

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available about the role of the NHS executive and its main objectives and tasks in the coming year. [19336]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The national health service executive has produced a business plan for 1995–96 which describes the executive's role, its principal objectives and tasks and the context in which these objectives will be carried out. Copies of the plan will be placed in the Library.

Caller Line Identification

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which ambulance services have access to caller line identification; which have plans for its introduction; which have requested caller line identification but have been denied access; and if she will make a statement. [17707]

Mr. Sackville: Caller line identification is not yet available to ambulance services.

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to change the regulations concerning women doctors and the NHS pension scheme; and if she will make a statement. [17710]

Mr. Malone: None.

Out-Patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS in England of the non-attenders to out-patient appointments in 1993–94. [17711]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available.

Glaucoma

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated number of people over 17 years of age with glaucoma in the United Kingdom. [17872]

Mr. Sackville: It is estimated that in England for all ages there were 101,000 patients suffering from glaucoma who consulted a general practitioner during 1991–92. Less than 0.5 per cent. of these were under 24 years of age. Source: Morbidity Statistics from General Practice, Fourth national Study.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Sight Tests

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from the British Medical Association and the Association of Optometrists on the effect of eye examination charges on those aged over 65 years. [18258]

Mr. Malone: The Association of Optometrists and the British Medical Association have written to me with a copy of their joint document, "Free Eye Examinations for the over 65s", which we are studying.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to assess the effect on the elderly of charges for eye examinations; and if she will make a statement. [18170]

Mr. Malone: None. Elderly people who are in receipt of income support, family credit or disability working allowance are entitled to a free national health service sight test, and those in receipt of a low income who have difficulty in paying for their optical costs, can claim help under the NHS low-income scheme.

Occupational Health

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate the measures her Department undertakes to address occupational health; and if she will make a statement. [18256]

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper, Cm 1986, identified the workplace as an important setting for the promotion of good health. The Department has set up a multi-disciplinary steering group to devise a practical means of encouraging employers to undertake voluntary health promotion activities. In addition, the health at work in the national health service programme has been running successfully now for nearly three years.

Guidance on "Occupational Health Services for NHS Staff" HSG(94)51 was issued to NHS employers on 6 December 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research into myalgic encephalomyelitis has been conducted in each of the last five years; and at what cost. [18573]

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC has been funding a study at the Institute of Psychiatry, the estimated cost of which is £91,000, to investigate chronic fatigue in general practitioners' attenders. The researchers at the institute are attempting to find ways to help people with chronic fatigue cope with their disease and regain their health. The MRC is always willing to receive and consider soundly based research proposals in competition with other applications.

Additionally, there is much basic science which is relevant to identifying and understanding possible mechanisms of chronic fatigue syndrome, such as neurotransmitters, immunology, which is taking place but which is not necessarily directly identified as related to CFS. The Department of Health also keeps in touch with research being funded by bodies such as the Linbury Trust.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the incidence and causes of, and departmental policy towards, myalgic encephalomyelitis. [18574]

Mr. Sackville: We recognise what is increasingly being referred to as chronic fatigue syndrome as a potentially debilitating and distressing complex. Unfortunately, the causes of CFS are not understood, nor is there a generally agreed method of treatment. While a number of definitions, disease descriptions or diagnostic criteria have been proposed, there is still no general consensus amongst the medical professions or among patient groups as to which should be used. This hampers research, and studies on the prevalence of the condition. There is no diagnostic test for CFS and diagnosis depends upon the patients symptoms/signs falling into one of these disease descriptions. Until these matters are resolved, there is no possibility of establishing the true incidence of CFS.

The national task force on CFS, PVFS—post viral fatigue syndrome—and ME has produced a report; the task force is autonomous of the Department. With a view to securing progress and promoting the development of a professional consensus, the chief medical officer has invited the Conference of Colleges to consider the report. The views of the Conference of Colleges will be of much assistance to the Department in helping to determine the best way forward.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in her Department and agencies for which she is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans she has to improve access; and if she will make a statement. [18587]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is clearly committed to improving access for disabled people to all departmental buildings. For example, we are currently considering the recommendations of an independent access audit report which we commissioned on Richmond house. We are also mindful of the need to consider wider access issues, including the availability of information and publicity material.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will name the green Minister for her Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18641]

Mr. Sackville: The green Minister for my Department is the Baroness Cumberledge, the Under-Secretary of State.

My Department is committed to sound environmental stewardship and its significant achievements over the past year are listed in paragraph 5.92 of the departmental report 1995, Cm 2812, copies of which are available in the Library.

My Department has contributed to the digest on green housekeeping in Government Departments which is being prepared for publication by the Department of the Environment.

The Government have recently published an account of its achievements in "This Common Inheritance 1995" Cm 2822.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many qualified doctors were employed three years ago and currently by the Benefits Agency medical service; and how many more he expects to employ to cope with the introduction of incapacity benefit. [17721]

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical service is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about doctors employed by the Benefits Agency Medical Services.

All the doctors employed by Medical Services are fully qualified registered medical practitioners who have several years experience. Three years ago (1992) the Department of Social Security employed 211 Medical Officers. As at January 1995 the Benefits Agency employed 182 Medical Advisers (previously known as Medical Officers).

The Benefits Agency Medical Services has already recruited 91 additional doctors for Incapacity Benefit and is expecting to recruit a further 60 from a second recruitment exercise which has just been completed, making a total of 151. The additional 151 doctors have been recruited initially on two year fixed term appointments.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the Benefits Agency medical service (a) three years ago and (b) currently; and what estimates have been made of costs over the next three years. [17720]

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical service is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the cost of the Benefits Agency Medical Services.

The internal record of Medical Services show costs in the year 1991/92 were £60m.

It should be noted that three years ago the costs of Medical Services were included in Benefits Agency central budgets. Not all the costs of the Medical Services were separated from the costs of other Benefits Agency Directorates. For example, this figure does not include accommodation costs, administrative staff costs, bulk purchased supplies, support services etc. It does however include costs of medical evidence obtained in connection with Disability Living Allowance, Attendance Allowance and War Pensions which have since been re-allocated to the appropriate directorate or Agency.

The cost of the Benefits Agency Medical Services for the current year is £38m. The drop in the costs is as a result of the devolution of costs of medical evidence in connection with Disability Living Allowance, Attendance Allowance and War Pensions to the appropriate directorate or Agency.

The estimated cost for the year 1995/96 is £60m. This figure includes the re-allocation of administrative support costs into Medical Services from elsewhere in the Benefits Agency; the costs of the additional volume of claims being reviewed for the new Incapacity Benefit; and the additional volume of claims expected for disability benefits.

It is projected that the costs of the Benefits Agency Medical Services over the following two years will be £70m per year. The projected rise takes into account the increased volumes of claims being reviewed for Incapacity Benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a regional and national breakdown of the sums of money recovered by the compensation recovery unit accompanied by a breakdown of the distribution of amounts of money recovered. [17812]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for a breakdown of the sums of money recovered and distributed by the Compensation Recovery Unit.

Information relating to regions could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

I have provided, at Annex A, a national breakdown by benefit of the monies recovered and allocated in respect of the various benefits during the 1994/95 financial year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefit	Amount recovered and reallocated £000s	Percentage of total amount
Invalidity Benefit (IVB)	51,912	47.1
Statutory Sick Pay (SSP)	17,270	15.7
Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB)	12,511	11.4
Income Support (IS)	7,999	7.2
Disability Living Allowance (DLA)	6,601	5.9
Reduced Earnings Allowance (REA)	5,237	4.7
Sickness Benefit (SB)	4,391	3.9
Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA)	1,520	1.4
Mobility Allowance (MobA)	1,039	0.9
Attendance Allowance (AA)	876	0.8

Benefit	Amount recovered and reallocated £000s	Percentage of total amount
Unemployment Benefit (UB)	355	0.3
Constant Attendance Allowance (CAA)	245	0.2
Exceptionally Severe Disablement Allowance (ESDA)	62	0.05
Disablement Working Allowance (DWA)	54	0.04
Retirement Allowance (RA)	5	0.004
Family Credit (FAMC)	0.6	0.0005
Total	110,081

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of all statistics collected on the work of the compensation recovery unit. [17813]

Mr. Roger Evans: Statistics for the 1994–95 year will be placed in the Library today. Thereafter, statistics collated on a quarterly basis will be placed in the Library regularly.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Barry Natton of Nab Wood, Noctorum road, Birkenhead, will receive a reply from the disability living allowance centre in Blackpool to a letter he wrote on 10 March 1994 and on which he sent reminder letters on 6 September 1994 and 5 January 1995. [18577]

Mr. Hague: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Frank Field, dated 5 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding correspondence from Mr Barry Natton to the Disability Benefits Unit.

Unfortunately we have not been able to find any trace of the specific correspondence referred to within the Parliamentary Question despite extensive searches.

I am concerned that there is an outstanding issue still to be resolved with the Benefits Agency. I have therefore arranged for a member of staff to visit Mr. Natton at his home to afford him opportunity to discuss any aspect of the case.

I am sorry that my reply cannot be more helpful.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged 60 years or more residing in the Clyde coast and Cowal area have had their invalidity benefit payments suspended while Commissioner Skinner's decision has been pronounced upon by the English law courts and the European Court of Justice. [16699]

Mr. Hague: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 4 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about suspensions of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) payments in the Clyde Coast and Cowal area.

Information has been provided relating to those customers resident in the area administered by the offices of the Benefits Agency's Clyde Coast and Cowal District, which does not necessarily correspond with county or borough boundaries.

The latest information available is based on the number of cases identified at 31 March 1994. At that date 480 IVB cases had payment suspended in whole or in part.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of Social Security how many women aged 60 years or more residing in (a) the Clyde coast and Cowal area of Scotland and (b) the rest of Scotland, England and Wales have had the suspension of invalidity benefit set aside on the grounds of hardship. [16700]

Mr. Hague: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 4 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about suspensions of Invalidity Benefit payments in the Clyde Coast and Cowal and other areas of Scotland; in England, and in Wales.

Information has been provided relating to those customers resident in the area administered by the offices of the Benefits Agency's Clyde Coast and Cowal District, which does not necessarily correspond with county or borough boundaries.

The numbers of customers who have had suspensions of IVB lifted in the areas in question are as follows:

Area	Number
Clyde Coast and Cowal Area	15
Rest of Scotland	249
Wales	26
England	704

The figures were obtained from a clerical count of affected cases maintained by BA offices within each area. The information provided is the latest available and is based on the position at 31 March 1994.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of invalidity benefit in each of the area directorates of the Benefits Agency and in each Benefits Agency district in each area, at the latest date for which figures are available. [17719]

Mr. Hague: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 4 April 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients.

The information requested is provided in the tables attached at Appendices 1–4, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The statistics relating to numbers of recipients were obtained from a 100% clerical count of cases within the offices of each BA District at 28 February 1995, and represent the latest information available.

The figures include a very small number of customers who are entitled to IVB but are not actually receiving the benefit; for example, because they are receiving an overlapping benefit payable at a higher rate.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing, for each year since 1987 (a) the total amount of cash losses due to irrecovable payments of pensions, etc., income support and family benefits recorded during the year, (b) the total amount of errors in benefit payments recorded and (c) the total savings for the year from anti-fraud initiatives.

Mr. Roger Evans: [pursuant to his reply 16 December 1994, Official Report, col 933–36]. I am advised that Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, is writing again to clarify his reply. I am arranging for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library together with any additional information.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 4 April 1995:

I am writing to clarify the information provided to you in my letter of 16 December 1994 in response to your Parliamentary Question of 8 December in which you asked for information about benefits cash losses, errors, and savings from anti-fraud initiatives.

Unfortunately, erroneous information was included in the table attached to my reply as Appendix A. The discrepancies relate to the details given on losses due to irrecoverable payments of supplementary benefit/income support for the years 1992/93 and 1993/94. I have attached a revised table giving the corrected figures.

I am sorry that my reply contained erroneous information and for the fact that it has taken so long to identify this. I apologise for any confusion this may have caused.

Appendix A—corrected

1986–1991: vote 2 Supplementary benefits/income support. 1986–1991: vote 3 Family benefits. 1991–1994: vote 1 Amalgamated pension benefits/income support/family benefits.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will consider issuing new guidelines to benefit offices for use when they process an application from a 16 or 17-year-old claiming estrangement from his or her parents; [16878]

(2) what is his Department's policy of ensuring that steps are taken to contact parents if a 16 or 17-year-old claims income support claiming estrangement from his or her parents; [16880]

(3) if it is his Department's practice to require benefit offices to inform parents of the reasons given by a 16 or 17- year-old child when claiming estrangement in pursuit of a claim for income support. [16879]

Mr. Roger Evans: We will be issuing an amendment to the guidelines on claims for income support under the severe hardship provision. Claims to income support are confidential, but benefit offices should ask young people to provide evidence in support of their claim where they say they are estranged. Offices should make careful inquiry into the circumstances and seek to contact the parents direct if such action would be appropriate. If the young person declines to co-operate, the office should consider whether it has enough evidence on which to make a judgment as to the existence or otherwise of severe hardship.

Pensions Bill

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes the amendments made to the Pensions Bill [Lords] in another place have made to the figures in tables 1, "Estimated Cost of National Insurance Benefit", and table 2, "Estimated Financial Effect on the National Insurance Fund" of the proposed changes which appear in the Government Actuary's Report on the Pensions Bill [Lords] (Cm 2714); and if he will publish amended tables. [17723]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The main effects on the national insurance fund of the Pensions Bill [Lords] and amendments to it in another place were set out in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Bill published on 21 March 1995.

The estimated expenditure effects of the amendments to paragraph 5 of schedule 4 assume that "the best 44 years" rule in the calculation of SERPS is intended to operate in the same way as the original "best 20 years" rule. This amendment would have no effect on the national insurance fund before 2022. Thereafter, costs would rise to reach around £1 billion in 2030, £1.9 billion in 2040 and £2.5 billion in 2050. Versions of tables 1 and 2 from the Govnerment Actuary's report on the Bill allowing for this amendment are given in the table.

As drafted, the actual effect of the clauses providing for the treatment of pension rights on divorce would depend on how they are interpreted by the courts. The estimate of £25 million in 2010–11 given in the financial memorandum to the Bill represents the maximum possible increase in the cost of NI benefits resulting from these amendments. Given this uncertainty, the figure is not included in the table.

Notes:

1. The above figures break down the total change in benefit expenditure shown in Table 1 into the effect of each separate proposal in the Bill. The sum of these changes may not agree with the total change in Table 1 due to rounding.

2. Positive figures denote higher expenditure or lower contribution income. Negative figures denote lower expenditure or higher income. The estimates therefore show the effect on the financial position of the National Insurance Fund.

3. All figures for future years should be read in conjunction with paragraphs 32 to 33 of the Government Actuary's Report regarding uncertainty.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17611]

Mr. Hague: The available information for expenditure by this Department, other than that incurred by the Department's agencies and other non-departmental public bodies, is as follows:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
(a) TV Advertising	1,355,000	2,486,000
(b) Radio Advertising	322,000	Nil

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people who will cease to receive incapacity benefit because they have reached state pension age during the first year of operation of invalidity benefit. [18072]

Mr. Hague: In the first year of operation, it is estimated that around 100,000 people will cease to receive incapacity benefit on reaching state pension age.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, (1) pursuant to his answer of 28 March, Official Report, column 559, relating to unemployment benefit, for what reasons a local councillor is regarded as being unavailable for paid work within social security regulations; [17956]

(2) on what grounds (a) convicted criminals who are subject to community service orders are deemed to be available for work and (b) elected local councillors who are registered as unemployed are deemed unavailable for work for the purposes of receiving unemployment benefit. [18283]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no deeming provisions which relate specifically to convicted criminals who are subject to community service orders or to elected local councillors.

Questions of doubt regarding a claimant's availability are referred to an adjudication officer.

Guidance on the determination of these questions is contained in the "Adjudication Officers Guide" volume 10, paragraphs 86030 et seq, a copy of which is in the Library. Specific reference is made to councillors and convicted criminals at paragraphs 86083 and 86087.

National Insurance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to prevent the avoidance of national insurance by payment of salaries in the form of antiques and works of art. [17830]

Mr. Lilley: I shall act whenever necessary where there is evidence of devious practice whose main objective is to avoid national insurance contributions.

I have today laid regulations—SI 1995/1003—which, by using existing powers, adds to schedule 1A of the Social Security (Contributions) Regulations 1979 payments by way of assets including vouchers for which trading arrangements exist and vouchers for those assets. The regulations also provide for the valuing of these items. These changes come into effect from 6 April.

In this way I am removing from the list of exclusions from NI contributions a range of schemes by which employers may have attempted to avoid payment. I have asked the Contributions Agency to continue to monitor closely any further efforts to develop practices whose main aim is to avoid NI contributions.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18514]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18516]

(3) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18512]

(4) How many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred to answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18515]

(5) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18511]

(6) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report. [18513]

Mr. Hague: The information is a matter of public record but could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. The available information for the years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 is as follows:

Fraud

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases of fraudulent claims for one-parent benefit were discovered for each year since one-parent benefit was introduced. [18266]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken for the winding up of an occupational pension scheme to be completed. [18552]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is not available, but it is not uncommon for the process to take at least two years and it can exceptionally take up to 10 years.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many occupational pension schemes are currently involved in a winding up process. [18551]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information is available only in respect of Inland Revenue tax approved occupational pension schemes with at least two members. As at 3 April 1995, approximately 4,760 occupational pension schemes were in the process of winding up.

"Living Together" Rule

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are applied when assessing benefit entitlement to define whether a man and woman are living together as husband and wife with regard to (a) definition of a stable relationship, (b) financial support, (c) sexual relationship, (d) presence of children and (e) public acknowledgement of their relationship. [18267]

Mr. Roger Evans: Decisions about benefit entitlement are made by adjudication officers. Where necessary, this incudes decisions about whether a man and a woman are living together as an unmarried couple. Guidance on the factors to be taken into account is issued by the chief adjudication officer. The adjudication officer will normally consider whether the alleged couple share normal household tasks, how long the couple have been together, whether they share bills and other household expenses, if other people regard them as a couple, and whether there are children of their union or they share responsibility for child care. Information about a sexual relationship is not requested, but, if volunteered, will also be taken into consideration.

Decisions are made on the facts of the individual case. The criteria do not represent a rigid formula, and the presence or absence of any single factor will not by itself determine the decision.

Social Fund

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received the Social Security Advisory Committee's report on his proposals for changes to the social fund funeral payments scheme; and if he will make a statement. [19209]

Mr. Roger Evans: We are now considering the Social Security Advisory Committee's report. On the basis of the recommendations in it, we propose to introduce a social fund funeral payments scheme which specifies necessary disbursements and covers their reasonable costs. We are also proposing a ceiling on the amount payable for funeral directors' charges. The precise specification of the eligible funeral directors' charges is currently under discussion with interested outside organisations. We will lay the SSAC report before the House along with our detailed response and the necessary amending regulations in due course. In the meantime, the current social fund provision for help with a simple dignified funeral for people in receipt of a qualifying benefit will remain in force.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18649]

Mr. Burt: My appointment as the Minister with responsibility for green issues within the Department took place in the autumn of 1994.

I have recently instructed the Benefits Agency to set up a pilot environment management scheme to promote good practice throughout the Department.

I attended a meeting of Green Ministers in December 1994 and discussed issues which included; sustainable development, the Rural White Paper, transport and green housekeeping.

I have not provided a direct input to consultations on the Environment Bill.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18590]

Mr. Hague: The Department has an on-going programme to ensure that disabled customers and staff have access to our buildings and services. A wide range of measures have already been taken to improve access, including surveys, building adaptations and the provision of equipment and services. The Department is also committed to providing access to information in a format which suits the customer, for example, in braille, tape or video. We will continue to build on this approach.

The Disability Discrimination Bill, which will apply to all Government Departments, contains new rights for disabled people in employment and creates a right of access to goods, facilities and services. It also establishes the National Disability Council to advise the Government on eliminating discrimination against disabled people.

Disability Discrimination Bill

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 March to the hon. Member for Ealing, North, (Mr. Greenway) Official Report, column 66, if he will list those organisations of and for the disabled and any other organisations which have made representations on the questions of disability legislation, and the number of letters received from the public and hon. Members on the subject; and what is the proportion in each category which supports the Disability Discrimination Bill. [18626]

Mr. Hague: I have received a wide range of representations on the question of disability legislation expressing a range of views, including support for and opposition to the Government's proposals. A detailed analysis of the correspondence could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

An analysis of the content of those letters which were specifically responses to the Government's consultation document "Disability on the Agenda" is available in the Library.

War Widows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of paying war widows a pension for life regardless of their marital status and other income or savings. [18155]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that the additional gross cost would be about £220 million in a full year. That estimate does not take into account savings in other benefits which would normally be offset against the war widow's pension.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Officers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fire officers are employed full and part time in the Home Office; who pays for them; what is the cost to public funds; what has been the cost to public funds, with particular reference to the palace and its estate, of the work of these fire officers in the Palace of Westminster; and how many officers are deputed to oversee the Palace of Westminster. [18087]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Twenty-six staff, all of them former or serving members of the United Kingdom fire service, are currently employed in the Crown premises inspection group of Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate. They are all employed full time. Their duties are to inspect all Crown-owned or Crown-occupied premises in England and Wales which may need to be certified under the requirements of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 and to issue fire certificates where appropriate. They are paid by the Home Office. Their total salary cost is £693,000 at 1994–95 prices. The fire service inspector who is head of the group is responsible for the necessary certification of the Palace of Westminster, but he has been assisted with this work by other members of the group.

Certification however deals only with those specific fire safety matters which are within the scope of the Fire Precaution Act 1971. Other fire safety matters generally are overseen by the fire safety manager appointed by the palace.

The Crown premises inspection group has been involved with work connected to the certification of the Palace of Westminster over a number of years and I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the total cost of the work.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to establish extradition relations with Libya. [18429]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Government have no plans at present to establish extradition arrangements with Libya.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18584]

Mr. Howard: The Department has a continuing commitment to meet the needs of its disabled staff, customers and visitors. In doing so, it takes into account the programme for action to achieve equality of opportunity in the civil service for disabled people; many of the measures taken to improve access for staff also benefit disabled customers and visitors.

Measures over recent years have included the installation of a ramp in a listed building with steps to the main entrance and a survey to identify further areas where accessibility could be improved; wherever feasible action was taken. An audit of facilities for disabled people in central London buildings has also been carried out. The majority of buildings in the Home Office estate have toilets accessible to wheelchair users and car parking spaces reserved for disabled drivers. Access for disabled people is taken into account in the design stage of new buildings and renovations.

Induction loops are available for use in the public enquiry office in the immigration and nationality department, in all United Kingdom passport offices, and a further two induction loops are currently being purchased for use in conference rooms in the central London estate. Accommodation staff in IND have participated in accessibility training at the centre for accessible environments. An information pack on disability has been made widely available to staff in the Department.

Disability awareness seminars have been run for staff, covering such matters as access, equipment, disability etiquette, management of disabled staff and awareness of the social context of disability.

Continuing consideration is being given to producing information in accessible formats. Arrangements are in place across the Department to translate material into braille and large print. The UK Passport Agency has staff trained to use sign language in all its regional offices, and the use of minicoms with the "Typetalk" service is also available.

The needs of disabled staff and visitors are kept under regular review through departmental action groups. Future plans include the provision of leaflets listing facilities for disabled people in the main London buildings.

Green Policies

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18640]

Mr. Howard: My right hon. and noble Friend the Baroness Blatch succeeded my right hon. Friend the Member for Fareham (Sir P. Lloyd) as Home Office green Minister in June 1994.

The Home Office green Minister sponsors the Home Office green housekeeping strategy which sets out the Department's policy on conserving natural resources and reducing environmental pollution. The strategy is supported by action plans incorporating recycling and energy efficiency schemes and a range of other green housekeeping initiatives.

The Home Office green Minister has corresponded with the Secretary of State for the Environment on matters relevant to this remit.

Home Office input to the Environment Bill is confined to criminal policy issues and will be made by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean).

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library and make available to the hon. Member for Walsall, North the full documentary reasons for deportation proceedings against Mr. Singh; [18712]

(2) if he will set out the reasons that deportation proceedings are being taken against Mr. Raghbir Singh Johal; [18696]

(3) what account was taken as to whether anything in the journal edited by Mr. Raghbir Singh Johal could be constructed as incitement to criminality in the United Kingdom when the decision was taken to deport him. [18697]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Raghbir Singh was detained on 29 March following a decision to deport him for reasons of national security and other reasons of a political nature, namely the fight against international terrorism. It would not be appropriate to comment further on the grounds for deportation.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been made to him over the deportation proceedings against Mr. Raghbir Singh Johal. [18717]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Three representations have been received on Mr. Raghbir Singh's behalf.

Horserace Totalisator Board

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the duties, hours of work and salary of each member of the Horserace Totalisator Board; [18771]

(2) if he will review the salary, terms and conditions of the chairman of the Horserace Totalisator Board. [18772]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Board members of the Horserace Totaliser Board are part-time public appointments for which the renumeration is £8,085. The post of chairman of the Tote is full time; the current salary for this post is £97,735 a year. The duties of board members include attending regular board meetings and Tote functions, advising on and participating in the board's policy and commercial decision-making process.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 28 February, Official Report, column 547, that Lord Wyatt would be reappointed, on the same conditions, for a further two-year term. At the same time, a review will be conducted of the Tote's future status.

Mr. Tarsend Singh Purewal

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been held and questioned by the authorities over the murder of Mr. Tarsend Singh Purewal. [18698]

Mr. Maclean: Seven suspects were arrested on 29 and 30 March. Following questioning, six of these have been released on police bail and a seventh has been served with a deportation order. Two other suspects were arrested on 24 January and released shortly afterwards.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those held and questioned by the authorities over the murder of Mr. Tarsend Singh Purewal were (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) Indian citizens lawfully resident in the United Kingdom; and how many of those are now subject to deportation. [18716]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Four were British citizens and three were Indian nationals, against one of whom deportation action is being taken.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects charges to be brought in the case of the murder of Mr. Tarsend Singh Purewal; and if he will make a statement. [18711]

Mr. Maclean: A major police investigation into the murder of Mr. Tarsend Singh Purewal is continuing. The bringing of charges is a matter for the police in the light of that investigation.

Closed Circuit Television

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department into which parliamentary constituency each of the successful bids under the CCTV challenge scheme falls. [18710]

Mr. Maclean: The information is contained in the table.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation for the statutory regulation of closed circuit television systems; and if he will make a statement. [18140]

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so.

Criminal Justice Units

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects every police division in London to have a criminal justice unit. [18709]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he expects criminal justice units to be in place for every police division within this financial year.

Police Stations (Access)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many London police stations are wheelchair accessible; and what proportion this is of the total. [18707]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 79 police stations within the Metropolitan police district are accessible by wheelchair, 43 per cent. of the total.

Senior Police Officers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if police officers holding the ranks of assistant chief constable and chief constable on 1 April will be entitled to transfer to fixed-term appointments on or after that date if they wish to. [18978]

Mr. Howard: The Police (Amendment) Regulations 1995 provide for the conditions of service of officers in this position to be varied by agreement between the officer concerned and his or her police authority. I hope that police authorities will be ready to agree to a variation in all cases where such an officer seeks to transfer to a fixed-term appointment.

Immigration (Complaints Audit Committee)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the first annual report by the complaints audit committee of the immigration and nationality department; and if he will make a statement. [19123]

Mr. Howard: A copy of the report has been placed in the Library. It is a helpful document and I welcome the committee's findings and conclusions. All 14 recommendations will be carefully considered. Some have already been implemented.

Interception of Communications Tribunal

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the appointment of the President of the Interception of Communications Tribunal. [19124]

Mr. Howard: Her Majesty has been pleased to reappoint the hon. Mr. Justice Macpherson of Cluny as president of the tribunal established under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 for a period of five years.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18498]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further 5, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18494]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18496]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18495]

(5) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18497]

Mr. Howard: The information requested is a matter of public record, but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer. [18493]

Mr. Howard: The number of parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer received by this Department in each year since 1979–80 are given.

Parliamentary year	Number of questions
1979–80	2,039
1980–81	1,092
1981–82	1,098
1982–83	855
1983–84	1,817
1984–85	1,584
1985–86	1,430
1986–87	812
1987–88	1,730
1988–89	1,525
1989–90	1,455
1990–91	1,273
1991–92	700
1992–93	2,526
1993–94	2,255
1994–4 April 1995	1,113

The further information requested is a matter of public record, but could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlie the recent rise in the number of women prisoners; and what types of crimes these women have committed. [18215]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Both the male and female prison populations have risen since 1993 and the same broad factors have contributed to the increased numbers of both men and women in prison. These factors are a rise in the numbers sentenced to custody by the Crown court; a rise in the numbers sentenced to custody by magistrates courts; and a rise in the remand population. In part, the increase in the numbers of offenders sentenced to custody can be attributed to the implementation of the provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1993 in August 1993 which amended the sentencing framework established by the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

The table sets out details of the sentenced female prison population by broad category of offence for 30 June 1993 and 28 February 1995:

Type of offence	30 June 1993	28 February 1995
Violence against the person	216	270
Sexual	15	10
Burglary	39	50
Robbery	77	90
Theft and handling	207	250
Fraud and forgery	64	90
Drugs	308	330
Other	125	130
Offence not recorded	74	160
Total	1,125	1,380

In addition, on 28 February there were 10 females in prison for fine default, 26 in prison for non-criminal offences and 511 on remand. This compares with 24 fine defaulters, 29 non-criminal prisoners and 402 remand prisoners on 30 June 1993.

Identity Cards

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to gauge opinion on the introduction of a national identity card scheme. [18427]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We intend publishing, later in the spring, a Green Paper on identity cards which will canvass views on possible options for a national identity card scheme and will serve as a way of assessing the level of public support for the introduction of identity cards.

Croydon Magistrates Court

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases of common assault Mrs. Jean Pearch, JP, has heard at Croydon magistrates court (a) in the last 12 months and (b) since she was appointed to the court; and how many have resulted in an imprisonment sentence for a first-time offender; [18213]

(2) how many cases of common assault have been heard by Croydon magistrates court in the last 12 months; and how many have resulted in imprisonment sentences for first time offenders. [18210]

Mr. Maclean: Information is not collected centrally, by this Department, on the number of cases heard by individual magistrates.

According to information held centrally by this Department, of the 122 defendants proceeded against for the offence of common assault at Croydon magistrates court in 1993—latest available—82 were convicted, of which one received a custodial sentence.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn 1995.

Transfer Grant

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what evidence he based his decision to withdraw the right of same-gender partnerships to permanent transfer grant as outlined in the Home Office staff handbook; and if he will place copies of this evidence in the Library. [18144]

Mr. Howard: The transfer manual made no such change. There never was such a right.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department of the asylum applications determined during the year 1994 how many were applications made (a) before and (b) after the coming into force of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; and for each of these categories, how many applications were (a) granted refugee status, (b) granted exceptional leave to remain and (c) refused. [18233]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is provided in the table.

Decisions in 1994, excluding dependants, on applications for asylum[1] made before and after the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 (26 July 1993)

Number of principal applicants

	Pre-Act applications	Post-Act applications	Total
Total decision[2]	[4]3,560	[4]14,445	20,990
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	275	550	825
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[3]	1,165	2,495	3,660
Total refusals	(4)2,120	(4)11,400	16,505

Decisions in 1994, excluding dependants, on applications for asylum(1) made before and after the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 (26 July 1993)

Number of principal applicants

	Pre-Act applications	Post-Act applications	Total
Refused asylum and ELR after full consideration	2,120	10,535	12,655

Refused under para. 180F of the immigration rules(4)	—	—	2,985

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.

[1] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

[4] Figures for refusals under para 180F—failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim—are not available split between pre and post-Act cases.

Prisoners

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what preventive measures he is proposing to reduce (a) the number of people entering prisons and (b) the number of prisoners re-entering the prison system. [18214]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Within the legislative framework provided by Parliament, it is for the courts to decide which individuals should be remanded into custody and which should be given custodial sentences. The Government do not believe that the courts should be prevented from sending to prison those who in their view ought to be there.

Two of the six gaols in the Prison Service three-year corporate plan relate to rehabilitation. These are to provide positive regimes which help prisoners address their offending behaviour and allow them as full and responsible a life as possible; and to help prisoners prepare for their return to the community. In working to achieve these goals, the Prison Service provides inmate development and pre-release training; sex offender treatment programmes; a more general programme addressing offending behaviour; jobsearch preparation courses and prison jobclubs; training for a wide range of national vocational qualifications; other constructive activities in prison workshops; and opportunities for work experience through the pre-release employment scheme.

Detainees

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) males and (b) females whose identity is in doubt are currently being detained at Campsfield house; and what is the longest current period of detention. [18071]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There are currently detained at Campsfield house (a) one male and (b) one female whose identities are in doubt. The longest current period of detention of such a person is six months and two weeks.

Boot Camps

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the visit sponsored by his Department to the United States in May 1994 to look at boot camps; when he intends to publish the findings and conclusions; and what response he has made. [17985]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total cost of the visit by prison officials and a social services inspector was £16,443. The findings and conclusions were presented to Ministers as advice and it is not proposed to publish them. I have asked the Prison Service to bring forward proposals for a pilot regime to be set up in a young offender institution in this country, based on the more positive aspects of boot camps and on approaches that are known to be successful with young offenders. When my right hon. and learned Friend and I have received and considered them and agreed the way forward, an announcement will be made.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17727]

Mr. Howard: We appreciate the potential benefits of electronic mail and the information super-highway, and we are investigating how the Home Office's business activities might be enhanced by exploiting these technologies. Home Office Ministers do not yet have Internet addresses, and only a few members of staff in the scientific specialisms currently use Internet e-mail in their work. However, testing is in hand to widen access to Internet facilities, and some Home Office statistical information has already been made available to the entire Internet community via the CCTA government information service—www.open.gov.uk. The publication of Home Office e-mail addresses on the Internet is dependent on the outcome of current development work.

Repatriation Assistance

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have made inquiries to the international social service about applying for financial assistance to return to their country of origin, in each year since inception; if he will break down these figures by age, gender and intended country of destination; what proportion of actual applications were accepted by the ISS; and how much on average was paid to each applicant, in each year since inception. [17715]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The international social service of the United Kingdom operates, on behalf of the Home Office, the voluntary repatriation scheme established under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971. Grants are not paid to applicants. Assistance is given in the form of payment of fares and incidental expenses including the transport of a small amount of personal effects.

The following table shows the number of inquiries to ISS about assistance to return to country of origin, in each year since its inception to the end of March 1995, with the proportion of applications accepted and the average amount of financial assistance in relation to each successful applicant:

Number of inquires, successful applications and amount of financial assistance per applicant: 1972 to 1995

Year	Enquiries	Proportion of accepted applications Per cent.	Average financial assistance £
1972–73	57	14	1,535
1973–74	271	28	1,666
1974–75	245	32	1,386
1975–76	274	42	1,441
1976–77	520	24	1,138
1977–78	493	29	1,542
1978–79	435	32	1,910
1979–80	273	48	1,535
1980–81	266	40	1,678

1991–92	140	68	1,390
1992–93	159	57	1,370
1993–94	278	37	1,850
1994–95	226	68	1,711

The information requested on age, gender and the intended country of destination of people making enquiries to ISS is not routinely recorded and such data that survives could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

However, the following table provides a breakdown of the country of destination of those receiving assistance under the scheme:

Police Funding

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what allowance is contained in the police funding formula for the abnormal costs in Gloucestershire as a result of the Frederick West investigation and the cost of policing royal households. [17646]

Mr. Maclean: The formula was never intended to take account of specific, large-scale criminal investigations in individual police force areas. If the impact of a particular operation looks likely to threaten the efficiency of a force, consideration can be given to special grant. Protection commitments are taken account of in the formula both by the element for existing police establishments which is included, and by an additional allocation for certain security-related commitments.

Community Sentences

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his definition of a soft option; and, based on his definition, what percentage of community sentences are based on this option. [17503]

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A community sentence is a soft option if it does not provide sufficient punishment for the offence committed. The 1995 national standards published on 9 March should ensure that no community sentences provide soft options.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotions materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17623]

Mr. Howard: Spending by the Home Office on advertising has been as follows:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
(a) Television advertising	4,156,322	7,347,834
(b) Radio advertising	210,420	261,878
(c) Newspaper advertising	1,122,620	602,966
(d) Other promotions including outdoor and cinema advertising	1,855,273	1,132,5[illegible]8
(e) Totals	7,344,635	9,345,[illegible]96

(f) Of these totals, the amount spent each year on recruitment advertising was:

1992–93—£1,386,787
1993–94—£1,590,980
1994–95—£2,904,999

The latest estimates for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are as follows:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(a) Television advertising	6,237,727	5,000,000
(b) Radio advertising	303,998	200,000
(c) Newspaper advertising	3,094,264	2,000,000
(d) Other promotions including outdoor and cinema advertising	576,140	Nil
(e) Totals	10,212,129	7,200,000

(f) The proportion of the total estimated for 1995–96 spent on recruitment is £2,000,000.

Terrorism, India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals, have been (a) arrested, (b) charged, (c) convicted and (d) acquitted over offences relating to the funding of terrorism in India in each year since 1992. [17304]

Mr. Howard: Information is not held centrally in the form requested, but I am not aware of any cases in these categories.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the investigations carried out on behalf of the charity commissioners, in each of the past three years, into complaints of the irregular expenditure of funds by organisations registered by the Sikh community living in the United Kingdom, in respect of which the charity commissioners have concluded that the irregular expenditure was directed to the funding of terrorism in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) India. [17241]

Mr. Howard : In the past three years, no investigation carried out by the Charity Commission or anyone acting on its behalf has resulted in this conclusion.

Miss Phillipa Drew

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons Ms Phillipa Drew, director of custody, will leave her post later this year; and to what extent her departure relates to the transfer of Mr. Marriott, former governor of Parkhurst prison. [17214]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 5 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Miss Phillipa Drew's transfer within the Home Office.

In line with plans developed last year this is a routine career development move for Miss Drew, who by the Summer will have spent three and a half years int he Prison Service. The move is entirely unrelated to any decision in respect of Mr. Marriott.

Havelock Road, Southall Gurdwara

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what findings the charity commissioners have made in respect of irregular expenditure of funds held by the Havelock road, Southall Gurdwara; over what period; and in respect of which individuals. [17244]

Mr. Howard: Havelock road, Southall Gurdwara is the property of a registered charity called Sri Guru Singh Sabha. The commission has no evidence to substantiate any allegations of irregular expenditure.

Prison Officers' Shopping Visits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of shopping visits made by prison officers on behalf of prison inmates during the week of 19 March. [17231]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 5 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about shopping trips by prison officers for prison inmates.

The situation has not changed since my recent reply to your Question of 23 January (col. 48). The practice of prison officers undertaking private shopping trips at the behest of prisoners was stopped last year. I have no evidence of any such shopping trips taking place in the week beginning 19 March.

Hospitality

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total expenditure of his Department on hospitality since his appointment; and what were the figures for each of the previous five years. [16763]

Mr. Howard: The provisional figure for expenditure on hospitality by my Department, including its executive agencies, from 1 April 1993 until 28 February 1995, which includes the period since my appointment to this office on 27 May 1993, is £88,044. Expenditure on hospitality in each of the previous five years was as follows:

1992–93: £55,651

1991–92: £28,094

1990–91: £30,080

1989–90: £28,630

1988–89: £26,192

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1985 the number of Metropolitan police officers who were charged with disciplinary offences following a successful civil action against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for a wrongful act by an officer; and, in respect of each charge, whether the offence was proved and what punishment was imposed.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 9 March 1995]: From 1988 to 1994 the numbers of disciplinary charges following successful civil actions where the damages or settlement sum was in excess of £10,000 were as follows:

Year of successful civil action	Number of cases
1988	0
1989	1
1990	2
1991	0
1992	3
1993	1
1994	1
Total	8

The breakdown of cases is as follows:

Number of officers	Substantiated/ Not substantiated	Outcome
Case 1 (Includes one case from 1989 and one associated case from 1990) Eight officers involved in action, five had criminal proceedings brought against them
Three officers	Substantiated	Dismissed
Two officers	Ancillary matter Substantiated	Dismissed
Three officers	Not Substantiated
Case 2 1990
One officer	Ancillary matter Substantiated	Reprimanded
Case 3 1992
One officer	Substantiated by PCA Tribunal	Reprimanded
Case 4 (Involves one case from 1992 and an associated case from 1994)
Seven officers	Substantiated	Dismissed
Case 5 1992 (three officers involved, one subject to formal disciplinary action)
One officer	Substantiated	Dismissed
Case 6 1993
One officer	Substantiated	Fined
One officer	Substantiated	Cautioned

Information prior to 1988 or where the settlement sum was less than £10,000 is not available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce the number of refusals by courts to impose prison sentences because of the danger of exposure to illegal drugs in prison by convicted criminals. [18158]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Sentencing is a matter for the courts in each case. The statutory criteria for passing a custodial sentence do not require the courts to form a judgment on reports of conditions in particular prisons. Decisions on where a prisoner should serve his sentence are taken by the Prison Service, and take account so far as possible of the circumstances of the prisoner and his or her offence. Reducing drug misuse is one of the Prison Service's key priorities. A new Prison Service drugs strategy will shortly be issued to all establishments.

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department had made of their effectiveness. [17453]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 April 1995]: There are 12 public inquiry points within the Home Office, including two in the Prison Service and six in the UK Passport Agency. The information available from existing records is as follows:

	Cost to establish £	Cost to operate £	Cost to publicise £	Calls received	Date began
Queen Ann's Gate	2,000	103,000 per annum	Nil	No record is kept	1976
Prison Service:
(i) victim helpline	8,400	1,000 per annum	Nil	27 per month	5 December 1994
(ii) prisoner location service	n/a	5,700 per month	Nil	5,000 per months	pre 1970
Passport Agency offices (6)	200,000	1,000,000 per annum	25,000 per annum	2,100,000 per annum	pre 1970
Immigration and Nationality Department (3)	93,500	543,000	Nil	3,800,000 (since points established)	since 1988

Notes:

1. The costs for establishing the enquiry points relate to current equipment.

2. The figure of operating costs for the Prison Service's victim helpline reflects estimated monthly expenditure from mid-April onwards. [The scope for publicising the service is under consideration.]

The Department considers these inquiry points to be essential for the provision of information to the public. The scope for improving the service provided is kept under review.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Belmarsh have been denied recreation facilities and association rights; and how many prisoners are protesting at their conditions. [17665]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 April 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Max Madden, dated 5 April 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many prisoners at Belmarsh prison have been denied recreation facilities and association rights; and how many prisoners are protesting at the conditions.

No prisoners have been denied recreation facilities or association rights, other than those subject to disciplinary sanctions on Rule 43 and two prisoners who escaped from Whitemoor.

Prisoners who have escaped or attempted to escape are required to wear prison clothing that has yellow patches on the jacket and yellow stripes on the trousers, to make them more readily identifiable. Two of the Whitemoor escapees are refusing to wear this clothing when out of their cells, at which time they will only wear a blanket. While they insist on taking this action they cannot be given access to normal recreation facilities or association.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18327]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 April 1995]: Some 545 posts in the Prison Service have been, or are in the process of being, contracted out. These are mainly involved in court escort work. No posts in the other executive agencies have been contracted out in this period.

The number of staff in the Prison Service and the Forensic Science Service has increased over the last two years. The number of staff in the Fire Service college has fallen from 202.5 in March 1993 to 188.5 in March 1995. In the case of the UK Passport Agency, the number of full-time permanent staff has decreased from 1,292 to 1,263 but permanent part-year appointments have increased from 120 to 190.

Fingerprints

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police authorities have decided to withdraw the automatic fingerprint recognition system; how many of these authorities no longer keep paper records and now have no way of checking fingerprints; and if he will make a statement on the implications for public safety. [18150]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 April 1995]: The AFR consortium, which represents 36 police forces in England and Wales, has decided to terminate its existing contract for the provision of automated fingerprint recognition facilities and to make new arrangements. All the police forces concerned retain paper records. My Department is monitoring the implications of these developments for the effectiveness of the police service in consultation with the AFR consortium.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take regarding the future organisation and level of criminal injuries compensation.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1995, c. 443]: The Judicial Committee of the House of Lords delivered its judgment today.

We are naturally disappointed at the judgment, which we are studying carefully. However, we will, of course, act in accordance with the law as determined by their Lordships.

The judgment relates to the method of introduction of the tariff scheme, not its merits. The Government remain firmly committed to the tariff approach. They believe a tariff scheme is the only sure way to bring the costs of the scheme under control and to provide a better service to the blameless victims of violent crime.

We therefore intend to introduce as soon as practicable a Bill inviting Parliament to give statutory force to a new tariff scheme as quickly a possible.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made by the Church Commissioners to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans the Commissioners have to improve access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners recognise the need to facilitate access for the disabled and we have made a number of improvements to our main office premises, namely No. 1 Millbank, SW1—built in 1906 and listed Grade II*. These include the provision of an invalid WC suitable for wheelchair use, ramps within the building where a change of level occurs and handrails where necessary. All internal doors can accommodate wheelchairs. The entrance to our office is staffed at all times and the needs of disabled visitors can be attended to immediately.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cross-border Co-operation

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border, and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Environment and (2) any of its agencies. [17056]

Mr. Moss: A copy of a list of north-south economic co-operation projects involving the Department of the Environment and its agencies is available in the Library.

The Department and its agencies also liaise informally and co-operate with various bodies in the Republic of Ireland on a wide variety of issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border, and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Health and Social Services and (2) any of its agencies. [17054]

Mr. Moss: The Department and the Social Security Agency maintain regular contact with officials in the Departments of Health and of Social Welfare in the Republic of Ireland on a range of issues of mutual interests. Also, cross-border co-operation is on-going between health boards in the border areas. Regular bilateral meetings take place on a north-south basis between Health Ministers in both jurisdictions and from time to time social security matters will also be the subject of discussion at ministerial level.

A list of north-south economic co-operation contacts and projects involving the Department of Health and Social Services and its agencies has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border, and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Economic Development and (2) any of its agencies. [17055]

Mr. Ancram: A list of cross-border projects involving the Department of Economic Development and its agencies is available in the Library.

In addition, officials of the Department and its agencies liaise informally with a number of bodies in the Republic of Ireland on a range of matters of mutual interest.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border, and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Agriculture and (2) any of its agencies. [17057]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland formally co-operates with the Republic of Ireland in the administration of the Foyle Fisheries Commission, in the operation and maintenance of the Shannon-Erne waterway, and is formally represented on the Advisory Board of the International Fund for Ireland, the Interreg Monitoring Committee, and liaises on rural development matters.

There are regular, on-going contacts between the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland and corresponding Irish Departments on matters of mutual interest. In addition, a list of north-south economic co-operation projects involving the Department is available in the Library.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland basis, (ii) cross border and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Finance and Personnel and (2) any of its agencies. [17058]

Sir John Wheeler: The Department of Finance and Personnel jointly administers the Northern Ireland/Republic of Ireland Interreg programme with the Department of Finance, Dublin. Occasional contacts are also made between the two Departments on civil service personnel management issues. A list of cross-border projects involving the Department and its agencies is available in the Library.

In addition, the International Fund for Ireland was established jointly by the British and Irish Governments in 1986 as an independent international organisation with the objective of promoting economic and social advance and encouraging dialogue between unionists and nationalists throughout Ireland. The fund has a variety of programmes which it operates and administers on a cross-border basis.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border; and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Department of Education; and (2) any of its agencies. [17059]

Mr. Ancram: A curriculum development project—the European studies project—was set up in 1986 by the Departments of Education in Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland and England. The project, which embraces over 300 schools in 14 European jurisdictions, is now funded jointly by the Departments of Education in Northern Ireland and in the Republic of Ireland. Regular liaison takes place between the two Departments on all aspects of the project.

A list of cross-border projects involving the Department of Education and its agencies is available in the Library.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) relationships, (b) joint bodies and (c) contacts presently exist on (i) an all-Ireland, (ii) cross-border; and (iii) a north-south basis through (1) the Northern Ireland Office and (2) any of its agencies. [17060]

Mr. Ancram: Article 2 (a) of the Anglo-Irish agreement established an intergovernmental conference, which is supported by a joint secretariat and which deals, among other matters, with the promotion of cross-border co-operation. A range of contacts on matters of mutual interest take place, at the appropriate level and as the need arises, between Ministers and officials of the NIO and of the Irish Government.

Other contacts with Irish Government officials may be established at various levels as the need arises: the Northern Ireland Forensic Science Laboratory, when investigating cases with a cross-border element, and the emergency planning branch, on issues relating to disasters and civil emergencies, have such contacts from time to time.

Drugs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 665, on drugs, if he will list the number of occasions and dates when meetings took place between (a) Northern Ireland Housing Executive senior executive and appropriate RUC level, (b) Northern Ireland Housing Executive regional level and appropriate RUC level and (c) Northern Ireland Housing Executive district level and appropriate RUC level on this matter; and what was the outcome of these discussions. [17642]

Sir John Wheeler: There is regular and effective liaison between the RUC and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at all appropriate levels; this is not restricted to drug investigations.

Local liaison is in response to all relevant issues and problems as they arise and the arrangements are not structured as asked. There is no central record of the contacts. The sub-divisional commanders in the respective operational areas are the primary point of contact.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17605]

Sir John Wheeler: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since 1979–80; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17606]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested on non-departmental public bodies is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

The administration of the next steps agencies is a matter for the chief executive of each agency. The Social Security Agency cannot identify separate SSA costs from the Department of Health and Social Services total. I have asked the remaining chief executives to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 30 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding the advertising.

The Compensation Agency has not incurred expenditure on advertising or other promotional materials and activities in any year since its creation on 1 April 1992. It is not anticipated that any expenditure will be incurred in the years 1994–95 or 1995–96.

Letter from P. Devlin to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 31 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about spending by NDPBs and Agencies on advertising and other promotion materials and activities.

Since its inception in April 1993 the NI Child Support Agency has spent a total of £10,294.27 on advertising and other promotion materials and activities. The information requested in relation to the specific categories is as follows:

	1993–94	1994–95
Television Advertising	Nil	Nil
Radio Advertising	Nil	Nil
Newspaper Advertising	£2,974.85	£1,391.80
Other Promotion	Nil	Nil
Materials and Activities	£5,927.62	Nil
Total	£8,902.47	£1,391.80
Proportion of total spent on Recruitment Advertising	33 per cent.	100 per cent.

The Agency has at present no plans to spend monies on advertising or other promotional activities in 1995–96.

I hope you find this information useful.

Letter from J. B. Watson to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 30 March 1995:

I am responding to your recent parliamentary question in which you asked for spending on various forms of advertising and other promotion materials and activities.

The Agency has not advertised on television or radio. The table below shows actual and estimated expenditure on other activities since the Agency was established in April 1992.

(Figures in £000)

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95 (estimate)	1995–96 (estimate)
Newspaper Advertising	10	3	7	10
Other promotional material and activities	—	—	1	2
Total	10	3	8	12

Costs for recruitment advertising are not met by the Agency.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 31 March 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about advertising and promotional materials costs incurred by this Agency, Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland.

The Agency was established on 2 August 1993. Since then the only advertising costs incurred have been:

1993/94
Newspaper Advertising	325.20
Total for 1993/94	325.20
1994/95
Newspaper Advertising	1,071.21
Campaign against Vehicle Excise Duty Evasion	15,000.0
Publicity for DVLNI Information Line	15,000.0
Total for 1994–95	16,071.21

No recruitment advertising costs were incurred during the period and we have no plans for any advertising expenditure for 1995/96.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 31 March 1995:

Advertising and Publicity (Written PQ No. 509): The Rate Collection Agency

Further to your recent Parliamentary Question, I have been asked to provide relevant information relating to the Northern Ireland Rate Collection Agency. For ease of reference I have outlined the details on the attached schedule and have commented briefly below.

The Rate Collection Agency was established in April 1991 as a Next Steps Agency within the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. The Agency is responsible for the collection of rates in Northern Ireland, and the administration of the Housing Benefit scheme for owner-occupiers. Expenditure on advertising and publicity in both 1990/91 and 1991/92 related to promotional materials designed to mark the launch of the Agency and increase awareness of the activities of the new body among both Agency staff and the general public. The expenditure in subsequent years was associated with the RCA contribution towards a publicity campaign to promote public awareness and uptake of Housing Benefit. No expenditure on advertising and publicity was incurred during 1994/95. However, extensive newspaper advertising will be required during 1995/96 to advise the public of the reorganisation of the local office structure of the Rate Collection Agency.

I hope that you will find this information helpful.

Expenditure on advertising and publicity—RCA

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Promotion materials and activities	7,100	2,800	1,600	—	—
Radio and television advertising	—	—	3,000	4,000	—

Letter from J. F. Codd to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 30 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your Question about spending by Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland on advertising since 1979/80. In the absence of the Chief Executive I am replying on his behalf.

Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland was launched as a Next Steps Agency on 1 April 1992 and we have no financial information for the years prior to that date. The figures for spending in the years 1992/93 and 1993/94 and the estimated figures for 1994/95 and 1995/96 are as follows:

	1992/93	1993/94	1994/95	1995/96
a.	None	None	None	None
b.	None	None	None	None

f.	None	None	None	None

Letter from D. J. Bell to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 31 March 1995:

REFERENCE: RECENTLY TABLED PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION FOR ANSWER ON 5 APRIL 1995

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question relating to expenditure by the Valuation and Lands Agency on television, radio or newspaper advertising or other promotional materials since 1979–80.

The Valuation and Lands Agency and its predecessors the Valuation and Lands Office and the Valuation Office have not incurred any expenditure within the period since 1979–80 on advertising or promotional materials.

I trust this information is sufficient for your purposes however if I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mrs. Ann Taylor, dated 4 April 1995:

Your recent parliamentary question to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland regarding expenditure on advertising has been passed to me for reply on behalf of the Training and Employment Agency.

The breakdown of figures you requested is as follows:

Year	Television advertising	Radio advertising	Newspaper advertising	Promotional material and activities	Total
1990–91	183,780	—	210,055	226,539	620,374
1991–92	48,815	—	115,781	178,282	342,878
1992–93	120,480	15,000	240,500	292,076	668,056
1993–94	43,175	16,218	142,234	292,164	493,791
1994–95 (actual)	181,254	13,919	137,816	282,477	615,466
1995–96 (estimate)	182,365	13,978	138,652	284,222	619,217

Recruitment advertising is a matter for the Civil Service Commission and is not delegated to the Agency.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18534]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18533]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested at only disproportionate cost.

Abortion

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the abortion rate for residents of (a) Greater Belfast and (b) Northern Ireland during each of the years 1990 to 1994; and were the comparable figures for England, Wales and Scotland. [18617]

Mr David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many abortions (a) paid for and (b) not paid for by the NHS were carried out on residents of Northern Ireland in premises in England and Wales in each year since 1990. [18866]

Mr. Moss: I shall write to the right hon. and hon. Members as soon as possible.

Industrial Development, South Devon

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what progress has been made on the identification of sites for industrial development in South

Down by the Industrial Development Board and the Department of the Environment and Planning Service. [18555]

Mr. Ancram: Ten sites have been identified as having potential suitability for industrial development in Downpatrick. Two are being surveyed to determine their suitability as Industrial Development Board industrial estates. The reports are expected at the end of May.

Roads

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial allocations have been made from EC structural funds, 1994–99 towards new roads infrastructure in the Downpatrick and Craigavon divisions; and if he will make a statement. [18556]

Mr. Moss: No financial allocations have been made from EC structural funds 1994–99 in respect of roads infrastructure in the Downpatrick division. In the Craigavon division, grant of £1,845,000 from the EC structural funds 1994–99 has, to date, been paid in respect of work on the Newry by-pass stage II.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the projects in the major road works programme with the appropriate costings for the 1995–98 period which was recently approved; and if he will make a statement. [18558]

Mr Moss: The major works programme for roads is reviewed annually and the latest programme, covering the period April 1995 to March 2000, is as follows:

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place with representatives of the EC task force and the European Commissioner responsible for the peace and reconciliation fund about the allocation of funding towards roads infrastructure in Craigavon and Downpatrick roads division; and if he will make a statement. [18559]

Mr. Moss: None. There will be an opportunity to consider specific projects when the programme has been agreed with Brussels.

Carlingford Lough Ferry Project

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards funding the Carlingford lough ferry project; and if he will make a statement. [18557]

Mr. Moss: The east border region committee, which is sponsoring the scheme, has been advised to apply for assistance from the EC under the Interreg initiative.

The Commission has just recently approved the joint Interreg programme for 1994–99. Application forms for assistance should be issued soon.

Cattle Plague

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of cattle plague were reported in each year since 1985. [18612]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Young Offenders Centre, Millisle

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the clothes provided for the inmates at the young offenders centre in Millisle for each of the last five years. [18618]

Sir John Wheeler: The cost per year to provide clothing for the young people at Lisnevin was as follows:

Financial year	Amount £
1989–90	6,843
1990–91	5,995
1991–92	10,464
1992–93	10,029
1993–94	9,614
Total	42,945

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will break down the repair costs for the young offenders centre at Millisle in each of the last five years. [18620]

Sir John Wheeler: The costs of repairs on-going maintenance at Lisnevin training school over the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1994 are as follows:

Financial year	Cost of repairs/ maintenance £
1989–90	5,706
1990–91	1,781
1991–92	[1]14,167
1992–93	5,167
1993–94	[2]17,421
Grand total	44,242

[1] Includes the cost of removing two temporary building.

[2] Includes the cost of laying flags around dormitories and installing fans in common rooms.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the repairs required to the young offenders centre in Millisle after the latest disturbance at the centre. [18621]

Sir John Wheeler: The latest disturbance at Lisnevin occurred on 23 November 1994. The following schedule sets out the cost of repairing damage following that disturbance:

Building	962
Plumbing	2,207
Electrical	113
Carpet	2,157
Furniture	1,175
Fire Alarm System	308
Painting	450
Total	7,372

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to build a swimming pool at the young offenders centre in Millisle; and what is the estimated cost. [18621]

Sir John Wheeler: There are no plans at present to construct a swimming pool at Lisnevin training school.

Out-patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost to the NHS in Northern Ireland of the non-attenders to out-patient appointments in 1993–94. [17713]

Mr. Moss: Information is not available in the form requested. It is normal practice to allow for non-attendance in the number of appointments made, and consequently the costs incurred in providing clinics are fully utilised. Any remaining issues concerning continuing treatment of non-attenders are addressed by the consultant responsible.

Green Policy

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of the functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18648]

Mr. Moss: I am green Minister for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, but all my ministerial colleagues share our common objective of promoting sustainable development in all areas of national life.

"Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy", CM 2426, presented to Parliament by the Prime Minister in January 1994, set out our overall approach and targets. Progress on these has been reported on more recently in "This Common Inheritance 1995", CM 2822, report which was published last month. Commitments 554 to 613 relate specifically to Northern Ireland and are listed towards the end of the report, which outlines progress and further action for 1995 and beyond.

The whole Government are committed to the objective of sustainable development, and I am in regular contact with all ministerial colleagues in the NIO, as well as other green Ministers.

While I am taking a keen interest in the Environment Bill, its provisions do not relate to Northern Ireland.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims were made in Northern Ireland (1) for set-aside and (2) in total under the arable area payments scheme in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) in 1994–95 of (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) between £5,001 and £10,000, (c) between £10,001 and £15,000, (d) between £15,001 and £20,000, (e) between £20,001 and £25,000, (f) between £25,001 and £50,000, (g) between £50,001 and £75,000, (h) between £75,001 and £100,000, (i) between £100,001 and £150,000, (j) between £150,001 and £200,000, (k) between £200,001 and £1 million and (l) over £1 million; and what is his latest estimate of the number of claims that will be made in 1995–96 in each value band. [18629]

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

Set-aside scheme—Northern Ireland

	Set-aside			Arable area payments
£	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	1995–96 (Est.) £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	[1]1995–96 (Est.) £

20,001—25,000	—	—	—	2	6	10
25,001—50,000	—	—	—	9	8	10
50,001 upwards	—	—	—	—	—	—

[1] Final figures will not be available until after 15 May 1995.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hectares of land were set aside under the arable area payments scheme in Northern Ireland in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and what is his estimate of the number of hectares of land that will be set aside in 1995–96. [18627]

Mr. Ancram: Some 1,231.02 hectares were set aside in 1993–94 and 2,062 hectares in 1994–95.

It is not possible to estimate the number of hectares of land that will be set aside in 1995–96 until after 15 May, which is the closing date for the integrated administration and control system applications on which farmers make their claims for arable area payments.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of payments under the arable area payments scheme in each Northern Ireland area in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; what is his estimate of the cost of payments in 1995–96; and how much in each year represent payments for set aside. [18628]

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

County	1993–94 payments £	of which set aside £	1994–95 payments £	of which set aside £
Antrim	673,272	14,744	912,248	42,835
Armagh	313,822	17,933	397,127	31,407

	4,011,951	237,652	5,607,848	509,737

It is not possible to estimate cost of payments in 1995–96 until after 15 May, which is the closing date for integrated administration and control system applications on which farmers make their claims for arable area payments.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18589]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland civil service and its agencies are aware of the problems associated with access for disabled people. To that end, all new Northern Ireland civil service general office premises are constructed in conformity with the requirements of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) which govern the provision of access, wheelchair space and toilet facilities for disabled persons. In leased properties, such facilities are provided so far as the physical constraints of the premises permit.

Additionally, over the last three years, work has been undertaken to have similar facilities installed, again so far as physical constraints permit, in existing buildings whether owned or leased. Most major existing premises have now been modified.

Funding is also provided to Disability Action, a local voluntary organisation to enable it to employ four access officers specifically recruited to work to improve access for disabled people.

Door-to-door transport schemes are provided for disabled people in Belfast and Londonderry.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has provided direct entrance facilities suitable for wheelchair users and unassisted entry through the installation of ramps and wider doors where possible. Where this has not been possible, all security and reception staff have been trained to assist people who have a disability.

The Housing Executive has also made special provision for the access and employment of people with disabilities. It continues to review these services and consults Disability Action as appropriate.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans exist to restructure loan stock introduced by Government in 1989 as part of the privatisation arrangements of Harland and Wolff Holdings plc. [19248]

Mr. Ancram: Arrangements have been made to replace the Government's existing £60 million unsecured interest-free loan stock repayable by 2019 in the company with a commercially based, interest-bearing and partly secured stock of £6.6 million repayable half-yearly over 10 years. This amount represents the discounted value of £60 million. The arrangements have been concluded following lengthy and detailed negotiation with the company after an approach from the directors, who sought a restructuring of the existing stock on the grounds that this was unduly constraining the commercial, operational and financial freedom of the company in the private sector. Adequate legal safeguards continue to be retained by the Government within the revised convenants and other material conditions of the new stock in relation to the company's continuing commitment to shipbuilding and the provision of employment opportunities in Northern Ireland.

Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18331]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 4 April 1995]: None of the jobs in the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments that have been transferred to agencies in the past two years have been taken over by contractors; 349 have however disappeared. The breakdown is as follows:

Agency	Jobs disappeared
Training and Employment Agency	302
Valuation and Lands Agency	28
Ordnance Survey for NI	19

Public Information Telephone Service

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the public information telephone inquiry lines operated by his Department, in each case indicating the costs of establishing, operating, and publicising these lines and the number of calls made to them up until this point; when they were established; and what assessment his Department has made of their effectiveness. [17748]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 3 April 1995]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Junior Doctors

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the average and maximum weekly number of hours on duty and on call for junior hospital doctors. [17385]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The standard working week for junior hospital doctors is 40 hours. The majority of them also contract for a number of additional duty hours, which vary according to their contract of employment.

The maximum weekly hours of duty for junior hospital doctors including additional duty hours, are laid down in the "New Deal". From 1 January, these are 56 hours and 64 hours for those contracted to work full and partial shifts respectively, 72 hours for those contracted for on-call rotas in hard-pressed posts and 83 for those on on-call rotas in non hard-pressed posts. From 1 January, no junior doctor should actually work more than 56 hours a week regardless of their contracted hours.

The census in Scotland on juniors' hours as at 31 December 1994 shows that the average contracted hours of full-time juniors who contract for additional duty hours was 71 hours a week. The maximum contracted hours was 108. The maximum contracted hours shown was 108, but this figure relates to posts in remote areas where the actual working hours are less than 56 hours per week.

Average hours of work, as opposed to contracted hours, are not held centrally. However, the 23rd report of the Review Body on Doctors and Dentists Remuneration, a copy of which is in the Library, contained the results of an independent survey of junior doctors and dentists in Britain which indicates that average hours of work were, in October 1993, 53.4 a week.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Internet electronic mail addresses of (a) his Department and (b) each Minister in his Department; and if he will make a statement on his Department's approach to the information super-highway. [17736]

Mr. Lang: External electronic mail can be sent to and from the Scottish Office using the international X.400 service, to which there are many subscribers in the United Kingdom. All ministerial private offices have access to this service. My Department is investigating linking its existing internal electronic mail system to the Internet to allow Internet electronic mail access. It already uses the Internet to disseminate information about educational research in Scotland, and is investigating making available a wider range of information using CCTA's world wide web server. In addition, a number of officials in my Department access the Internet to obtain information on a variety of subjects in support of their business. My Department is co-operating with other Departments and agencies to investigate the use of broadband interactive communications for the delivery of more effective and efficient public services in Scotland, and to help ensure that businesses in Scotland are aware of the commercial opportunities arising from the use of these services.

Disabled People

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proposals he has to improve the adaptability of existing district and sheriff courts in relation to the needs of people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement; [18042]

(2) if he will list the sheriff courts which provide independent access for disabled citizens both in terms of access and egress and freedom of movement within such buildings; and if he will make a statement; [18040]

(3) if he will list the sheriff courts which have (a) sound enhancement systems for those citizens with impaired hearing, (b) lavatories for disabled people and (c) accessible refreshment facilities for disabled people; and if he will make a statement; [18043]

(4) if he will list the sheriff courts which do not comply with those building regulations which determine access and freedom of movement criteria for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement. [18041]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The detailed information requested is shown in the table. District courts are the responsibility of the district and island councils.

All new sheriff court houses are designed to ensure that disabled people have access to all public areas. A long-term programme of building improvements is being implemented, a major purpose of which is to improve access and facilities for the disabled at existing court houses.

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for 1992–93 and 1993–94, separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotion materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising; and what are his latest estimates for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17607]

Mr. Lang: Details on expenditure on information publicity are set out below:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Television	831,000	934,000
Radio	120,000	80,000
Press	415,000	511,000
Other promotional activities	1,072,000	755,000
Total	2,438,000	2,280,000

The estimated outturn for expenditure on information publicity for 1994–95 is £2,254,000 and the estimate for 1995–96, £3,171,000.

Recruitment advertising is done through the press and expenditure for 1992–93 and 1993–94 was £318,000 and £253,000 respectively. The estimated outturn for recruitment expenditure in 1994–95 is £135,000 and the forecast for 1995–96 is £126,000.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80, and how many such questions received a substantive answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18473]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18474]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18475]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question. [18476]

Mr. Lang: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18478]

Mr. Lang: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18477]

Mr. Lang: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. However, I understand that figures are available from POLIS for next step agencies by parliamentary Session from 1992–93 onwards.

NHS Staff (Tayside)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representative of the health board and health trusts in Tayside to discuss morale among NHS staff in that area. [18143]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State for Scotland has no plans at present to meet representatives of the health board and health trusts in Tayside. There are, however, regular meetings between Scottish Office officials and representatives of health boards and NHS trusts, including Tayside.

Microscopes in Schools

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he is sending to the Royal Microscopical Society in respect of its proposal that there should be a microscope in every school. [16376]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State has not received any representation from the Royal Microscopical Society about the provision of microscopes in schools.

The value of microscopes is recognised in the national guidelines for environmental studies 5-14. These include microscopes in the range of equipment which schools should have available to provide for the reasonable needs of pupils and teachers in their investigative activities. However, the choice of equipment for schools is a matter for education authorities.

Gourock Ropeworks

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had, and with whom concerning the present condition and future of the Gourock Ropeworks of Port Glasgow; and if he will make a statement. [17303]

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions on this matter. However, as the question relates to matters undertaken by Historic Scotland, I have asked the agency's director and chief executive, Mr Graeme Munro, to write to the hon. Member.

The reply will appear in the Official Report and a copy deposited in the Library of the House.

Letter from Graeme Munro to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 5 April 1995:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for written answer on 5 April asking what recent discussions he has had about the Gourock Ropework building. The question relates to operational matters undertaken by Historic Scotland and I have been asked to reply. The terms of this letter will be reproduced in the Official Report and a copy of it will also be deposited in the Library of the House.

Historic Scotland has recently had contacts both with Scottish Homes and Bellway Homes about the Ropeworks building. As you will be aware, a feasibility study prepared by the company last year concluded that both building and site were ideal for a scheme of conversion and re-development for residential accommodation. Given such positive conclusions it was right and proper that this avenue for putting together a scheme for the re-use of this listed building should be explored carefully and extensively. It is now clear, however, from discussions which I have had with Scottish Homes that a package of assistance to make the scheme viable cannot be put together.

Government policy with regard to listed buildings is that no worthwhile building should be demolished unless it is demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt that every effort has been exerted by all concerned to find practical ways of keeping it. I am now satisfied that the concerted efforts to find a practical use for the building, encouraged by Historic Scotland, have fulfilled this policy commitment.

The position concerning demolition is clear. In order to demolish a listed building such as the Gourock Ropeworks, listed building consent is needed. To date no application for such listed building consent has been received by Historic Scotland.

European Social Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students have benefited from the European Union's social fund provision, enabling them to undertake courses in (a) universities and (b) colleges of further education. [17260]

Mr. Kynoch: The estimated numbers of beneficiaries based on application by universities and further education college for European social fund in 1994 in Scotland are as follows:

	(a) Universities	(b) FE Colleges
Objective 1	77	932
Objective 2	386	5,180
Objective 3	1,365	1,631
Objective 5b	0	1,102
All objectives	1,828	8,845

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidlines he has given to universities and other colleges concerning the training allowances given to mature students by way of the European Union's social fund. [17262]

Mr. Kynoch: The guidelines issued annually to all potential applicants for European social fund including universities and colleges set out the items of expenditure which are eligible for assistance. The guidelines cover how the allowances to students and other trainees are to be treated.

Well-woman Centres

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has offered to fundholding general practitioners about the purchasing of treatment and care from well-woman centres; and if he will make a statement. [17261]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific guidance has been issued to GP fundholding practices on this subject.

Unitary Authorities

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on indicative grants for the new unitary authorities. [17263]

Mr. Kynoch: To assist the shadow councils with their financial planning for 1996–97, it is proposed to prepare illustrative 1995–96 grant aided expenditure assessments and, in terms of section 24 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994, and subject to the approval of the House, notional 1995–96 budgets for each of the councils. We also plan to issue to them provisional non-housing capital allocations.

Wildlife Offences

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what central records he maintains concerning criminal offences and activity in relation to (a) wild birds and (b) other wildlife; and if he will make a statement. [17264]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office holds statistical information, provided by Scottish police forces, on the following offences in relation to wild birds and other wildlife.

(a) Categories of crimes and offences including offences in relation to wild birds:

Offences involving birds

(b) Categories of crimes and offences including offences in relation to other wildlife:

Cruelty to animals (excluding dogs, birds)

Offences involving animals (excluding dogs or birds or elsewhere classified)

Salmon and freshwater fisheries offences

Sea fisheries offences

Possession of salmon or trout unlawfully obtained

Poaching and game laws

Offences under Deer (Scotland) Act 1959 and Deer (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 1982.

Housebuilding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people employed in the housebuilding industry; and what were the figures in (a) 1981 and (b) 1989. [17265]

Mr. Kynoch: Information is available only for the construction industry as a whole. In December 1994, the number of employees in employment in the construction industry in Scotland was 119,200. The corresponding figure for December 1981 was 133,600, and for December 1989 was 132,800.

Drug Abuse

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the change in local government upon the work of those employed in anti-drug abuse programmes; and if he will make a statement. [17266]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The important and continuing role of local authorities in tackling drug misuse was reflected in the report of the drugs task force, led by my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State. They will be represented on the local drug action teams, which are now being set up throughout Scotland, with responsibility for developing a strategic plan addressing all aspects of the drug misuse problem in their areas. In recent guidance, we have emphasised the importance of drawing the new shadow local authorities into the activities of the drug action teams to facilitate the strategic planning process and to ensure that local government continues to play its full and vital part in the response to drug misuse at local level.

Out-patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the secretary of State for Scotland how many non-attenders to out-patient appointments there were in 1994; and what was the cost to the NHS. [17704]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provisional figure for new out-patient appointments where the patient failed to attend in 1994 is 134,207. Corresponding information for return out-patients, and information on the resultant cost to the NHS of non-attenders is not centrally available.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions the Crown Office has had with Mr. Ron Smith of Scottish Woodlands Ltd., Castle Douglas, about a red and orange tarpaulin found at Lockerbie, before Christmas 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authority to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 26 January to the general manager of Lothian health board concerning general practitioner fundholding. [18206]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for the acting general manager of Lothian health board. However I understand that the information requested by the hon. Member will be supplied shortly.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Caithness and Sutherland NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18174]

(2) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Raigmore hospital NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18175]

(3) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Royal Alexandra hospital NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18176]

(4) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Southern General hospitals NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18177]

(5) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the West Lothian NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18178]

(6) when the hon. Member of Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Stobhill NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18187]

(7) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Yorkhill NHS trust concerning performance-related pay; [18179]

(8) when the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South can expect a response to his letter of 24 February to the chief executive of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS trust concerning performance-related pay. [18186]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter which should be pursued with the chief executive of the individual trust concerned.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will write to the chief executives of Scotland's NHS trusts and the general managers of Scotland's health boards reminding them of their duties to respond to correspondence from hon. Members timeously. [18190]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble Friend the Minister of State has asked the NHS management executive to remind chief executives of NHS trusts and the general managers of health boards of their duties in relation to correspondence from hon. Members.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18652]

Sir Hector Monro: I am the green Minister at the Scottish Office. All significant environmental initiatives taken by the Scottish Office are reported in the annual series of White Papers "This Common Inheritance"—the most recent, Cm 2822, was published on Wednesday 29 March. Many are also highlighted in the annual departmental reports.

I am also fully involved in consideration of the Environment Bill, in particular the provisions setting up the Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of payments (a) for set-aside and (b) in total under the arable area payments scheme in Scotland in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95; and what is his estimate of the cost of payments in 1995–96. [18633]

Sir Hector Monro: Payments which have been made to farmers in Scotland under the arable area payments scheme in the scheme years 1993 and 1994 are as follows:

	(a) Set-aside £	(b) Total AAPS payments £
1993	16,195,029.92	93,287,405.44
1994	22,792,098.25	115,593,078.84

The cost of payments in the 1995 scheme year will depend on the amount of valid claims made and on the green pound–ecu exchange rate at 1 July 1995.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of land were set aside under the arable area payments scheme in Scotland in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95; and what is his estimate of the number of hectares of land that will be set-aside in 1995–96. [16661]

Sir Hector Monro: Payments were made in respect of 80,661.09 hectares and 77,252.12 hectares of land set aside in the scheme years 1993 and 1994 respectively. Figures are not yet available for the 1995 scheme year.

Flooding (Strathclyde)

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the measures he has taken to assist local authorities and other institutions in the aftermath of the floods within Strathclyde earlier this year. [17600]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 March 1995]: The measures taken under my responsibility in response to the Strathclyde flooding include:

£100,000 supplementary capital allocation to Renfrew District Council in 1994–95, to provide temporary accommodation for those made homeless;

£150,000 supplementary housing capital allocation to Strathkelvin District Council in 1994–95 to undertake flood abatement works at Lennoxtown;

£200,000 supplementary capital allocation to Glasgow District Council in 1994–95 to undertake urgent housing repairs;

£1.365 million supplementary capital allocations to Strathclyde Regional Council in 1994–95 for urgent repair work on non-housing services;

authorising Renfrew District Council to carry forward unutilised capital consent of up to a maximum of £1.85 million from 1994–95 for expenditure in 1995–96;

authorising Strathkelvin District Council to carry forward unutilised capital consent of up to a maximum of £0.53 million from 1994–95 for expenditure in 1995–96;

£2.5 million additional capital allocations in 1995–96 for remedial work on housing to Renfrew District Council and Strathkelvin District Council;

£10,000 contribution to Clyde River Purification Board study on the cause and extent of the recent flooding; and > an increase of £180,000 in the 1995–96 non-housing capital consent allocation to Renfrew District Council to meet the cost of repairs to the Linwood Sports Centre.

In addition, the Government scheme of special financial assistance, known as the Bellwin scheme, has been activated.

A draft national planning policy guideline on planning and flooding has recently been issued for consultation.

Prescriptions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 174, (i) how many pre-payment certificates were issued and (ii) how many prescriptions were dispensed on presentation of a pre-payment certificates, in each financial year since 1979–80 and for each health board in Scotland. [18254]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available. The number of pre-payment certificates issued is not held centrally. Prescriptions dispensed on presentation of pre-payment certificates are not separately identified.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 174, how many prescriptions for which no charge was made were issued excluding items issued on prescription on presentation of a pre-payment certificate, in each financial year since 1979–80 and for each health board in Scotland. [18253]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available. Prescriptions dispensed on presentation of pre-payment certificates are not separately identified.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been (a) the amount raised from prescription charges within the NHS in Scotland and (b) the expenditure on the system of NHS prescriptions for medication within the NHS in Scotland; and if he will give the difference between (a) and (b) in each year since 1979–80. [18261]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for the financial years 1979–80 to 1993–94 is set out in the table. The information shows (a) the annual income from NHS prescription charges paid by patients in respect of drugs and appliances dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and appliance suppliers and the sums collected in respect of the sale of prepayment certificates; (b) the net ingredient cost of the drugs and appliances and the remuneration paid to community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and appliance suppliers for dispensing these drugs and appliances; and (c) the difference between (a) and (b).

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was raised through the levying of prescriptions charges by each health board in Scotland in each financial year since 1979–80. [18188]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for each health board for the financial years 1979–80 to 1993–94 is set out in the tables. The amounts of revenue shown include NHS prescription charges paid by patients in respect of drugs and appliances dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and appliance suppliers. NHS prescription charges recovered from patients under health board post-dispensing checking arrangements are also included.

The amounts shown do not include the sums collected in respect of the sales of pre-payment certificates which are not deemed to be the payment of a charge under the NHS (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) (Scotland) Regulations 1989, as amended.

A9

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what objections have been made to the proposed design of the Logie Easter-Garrick bridge stretch of the A9; and what response has he given. [18563]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Draft statutory orders were published in October 1993 and five objections were received, one of which has been resolved. The remaining four objections relate to the provision of facilities for cyclists. The Scottish Office continues to seek resolution of these objections.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current estimated completion date for the Logie Easter–Garrick bridge stretch of the A9. [18564]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In his statement on 24 May 1994, my right hon. Friend announced that he expected that work would start on the improvement of the A9 between Logie Easter and Garrick bridge before March 1997 subject, among other things, to completion of the statutory procedures. Because of outstanding objections, these procedures remain incomplete and a programme for construction has not been determined.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he first proposed a route action plan for the A9 north of Dornoch bridge. [18565]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A route action plan approach to the A9 north of Dornoch was initially raised at a meeting with a delegation from Highland regional council in January 1991.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Highland regional council following the proposal for a route action plan for the A9 north of the Dornoch bridge; and what reply he gave. [18566]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has received no representations from Highland regional council. However, since the question of a route action plan was first raised, my officials have been in regular contact with officials from the regional council.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he issued the terms of reference for the route action plan north of the Dornoch bridge. [18567]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following the submission of draft proposals for the action plan in January 1992 and after a series of discussions with Highland regional council, a brief for the route action plan was issued to the regional council in January 1994.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive proposals to implement a route action plan; and if he will make a statement. [18568]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highland regional council is to submit an interim report on the route action plan by December 1995. This will describe the extent of congestion on the existing road, the nature of the existing constraints to free flow of traffic and the options which will be examined for testing. The interim report will be analysed to produce a programme of works to be included in the route action plan.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to obtain a European regional development fund grant under objective 1 funding for the improvement of the A9 between Helmsdale and the Ord of Caithness; and if he will make a statement. [18569]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: An application for ERDF objective 1 funding would be premature at this time. Consideration will be given to lodging an application in due course.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is currently giving to the improvement of the A9 at Berriedale; and if he will make a statement. [18570]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The case for improvements at Berriedale Braes will be examined as part of the A9 route action plan.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Highland regional council about upgrading the A9 at Berriedale. [18571]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has not received recently any representations from Highland regional council about the upgrading of the A9 at Berriedale. However, Berriedale lies within the scope of the A9 north of Dornoch route action plan study currently being carried out by Highland region and as such my officials have been in regular contact with officials from the regional council.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 March 1995]: During the next three years, I intend to continue our normal policy of employing some staff on a casual basis to fill temporary vacancies which arise seasonally, or to meet a temporary increase in demand. It is not possible to predict how many will be employed on this basis, although we would not expect it to differ signifcantly from previous years.

Historic Scotland

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To aks the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the key performance targets he has set for Historic Scotland for 1995–96. [19122]

Mr. Lang: I have set Historic Scotland the following key performance targets for 1995–96:

	Target
Protecting Scotland's Built Heritage
Number of monuments scheduled	360
Weighted number of listed building resurvey units	170
Percentage of scheduled monument consent cases resolved within 12 weeks	80 per cent.
Percentage of listed building consent cases resolved within 28 days	97 per cent
Number of historic building repair projects newly assisted by grant	145
Total value of grant-assisted repairs in progress	£31 million
Backlog of conservation of monuments in care	[1]reduce Promoting and presenting the Building Heritage
Number of visitors to monuments in care	2.4 million
HS market share compared to other paid visitor attractions in Scotland	20.5 per cent.
Percentage of satisfied visitors (based on surveys)	90 per cent.
Average retail spend per visitor	£0.94
Agency Management
Percentage efficiency gains/savings on all non-grant expenditure	1.5 per cent.
Total agency income	£9.1 million

Note:

[1] A measure to show the percentage reduction in the conservation backlog will be developed for 1997–98, following the quinquennial survey of the estate in care in 1996.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland (a) the number of patients treated by dentists and (b) the number of patients treated by a dentist who did not make any payment for their treatment for each financial year since 1985–86. [15531]

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The information is in the tables. Information for earlier years is not available.

[1] 1987 to 1990 information is for all courses of treatment for adults and children.

[2] 1991–92 onwards information is for all courses of treatment for adults and for courses of treatment for children where an item-of-service fee was paid. Since October 1990 most treatment for children has been provided under capitation arrangements and is not counted as individual courses of treatment.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland the average amount paid in charges by a patient receiving dental treatment for each financial year since 1985–86. [15538]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 March 1995]: The information is in the table. Information for earlier years is not available in this form.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer on 21 March, Official Report, column 174, what was the number of (a) deregistrations from NHS dentists to enter private contract by agreement, (b) deregistrations attributable to a dentist leaving a practice and (c) NHS registered dental patients, in respect of each health board area in Scotland and in respect of each year since 1991–92. [16369]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The information requested about deregistrations is not available centrally. Information about the numbers of NHS registered dental patients in each health board area since 1991–92 is contained in the table.

Council Housing

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants, and subsequently repossessed, by local authority area, in each of the last five years. [16000]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 March 1995]: Information on the number of repossessions of dwellings bought under the right-to-buy scheme is not available. However, I understand from figures provided by the Council of Mortgage Lenders that 1,791 properties in total were repossessed in Scotland in 1994, which represents 0.22 per cent. of the total number of properties with mortgages outstanding. This is around half the proportion for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities in terms of (a) access to telephones, (b) use of equipment, (c) use of offices, (d) access to ministerial meetings, (e) sight of correspondence, (f) attendance at inter-departmental meetings and (g) access to civil servants are available to specialist advisers in his Department. [15612]

Mr. Ian Lang [holding answer 23 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 27 March, Official Report, column 435.

Ferry Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the timetable to be followed in advertising, explaining the appeal procedure, setting a deadline for receipts of objections and, where appropriate, holding a public inquiry into the proposed withdrawal of any ferry service, under the terms of the Railways Act 1993; and if he will make a statement; [16716]

(2) what is the remit of the rail users consultative committee, in respect of the right to call public inquiries into the proposed withdrawal of any Scottish ferry service, under the terms of the Railways Act 1993; and if he will make a statement. [16720]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Railways and Roads on 28 March, Official Report, column 534.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he had given to the rail users consultative committee over its powers, under the Railways Act 1993, to call public inquiries into the proposed withdrawal of any ferry services; what subsequent representations he has received for the RUCC; what plans he has to hold further discussions with the RUCC over the matter; and if he will make a statement. [16717]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 March 1995]: The Scottish Office wrote to Mr. Lawrence Kemp, the acting chairman of the rail users consultative committee for Scotland, on 17 February about the statutory provisions in connection with its functions in relation to ferry services and drew attention to the need for the committee to seek its own legal advice. I understand that my hon. Friend the Minister for Railways and Roads will be writing shortly to Mr. Kemp with a full statement of the Government's understanding of the position. I have received no further representations and have no plans to hold further discussions given my hon. Friend's intention to write.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the contractual and financial implications that would arise, in respect of the toll-funded Skye bridge project, from the continuation of a parallel ferry service in competition with the road bridge beyond the date of the bridge's opening to traffic, and if he will make a statement; [16718]

(2) what discussions he has had with Highland regional council over the contractual and operational implications which would arise, in respect of the toll-funded Skye bridge project, from the continuation of a parallel ferry service in competition with the road bridge beyond the date of the bridge's opening to traffic; and if he will make a statement. [16719]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend decided to proceed with the planning and construction of the bridge to Skye on the understanding that the ferry service would be withdrawn once a bridge was provided. This was fully discussed with, and accepted by, Highland regional council. Since there is no intention that the ferry service would continue, no discussions have taken place with Highland regional council on the contractual, financial or operational implications associated with the continuation of a ferry service and no assessment has been made of these matters.

Employment Costs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual cost of employing (a) a hospital consultant, (b) a senior registrar, (c) a registrar (career), (d) a registrar (SHO3), (e) a senior house officer, (f) a house officer, (g) a qualified nurse and (h) an ambulance paramedic. [16696]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 March 1995]: In Scotland, the average cost of employing (a) a hospital consultant was £63,862, (b) a senior registrar was £42,671, (c) a registrar (career) was £36,038, (e) a senior house officer was £30,052, (f) a house officer was £21,046, (g) a qualified nurse was £20,555.

The information has been calculated over a 12-month period based on the nine months from 1 April to 31 December 1994. It cannot be broken down to show the average cost of a registrar (SHO3) or an ambulance paramedic.

ENVIRONMENT

Advertising

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each non-departmental public body and agency for which he has responsibility and, for each, list separate figures for the spending by that body or agency on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, (d) other promotional materials and activities, (e) the totals in each year of (a) to (d) and (f) the proportion of (e) that was spent on recruitment advertising for each year since 1979–80 or for each year of its existence if it has been created since then; and what are his latest estimates of (a) to (f) for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [17616]

Sir Paul Beresford: A list of my Department's non-departmental public bodies can be found in "Public Bodies 1994", published by HMSO and available in the Library of the House. Information back to 1979 is not available.

There was no expenditure by executive NDPBs or agencies in 1994–95 on either (a) television or (b) radio advertising and there are no plans for such expenditure during 1995–96.

The Department is responsible for promotional and advertising expenditure by advisory NDPBs and tribunals.

Information is not kept in the format requested to answer (c), (d) or (f) and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have set a budget which would exceed the cap set for those authorities if the Government were to confirm its pro-capping criteria. [18061]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 4 April.

Latham Report

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the recommendations of the Latham report; and from which organisations; [18059]

(2) how many representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the recommendations of the Latham Report; and from which organisations. [18056]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received some 150 letters from all sections of the construction industry—particularly from specialist contractors. They have been uniformly supportive of the recommendations of the Latham Report.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which recommendations of the Latham report he plans to implement. [18057]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have already made my Department the lead Department for progressing the recommendations in the report. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has established a scrutiny of Government's own procurement designed to ensure that Government can be a best practice client. We have established and received the report of the review implementation forum and, on its advice, my right hon. Friend has established a construction industry board, chaired by Sir Michael Latham, which brings together all parts of the industry, its clients and relevant government departments. Also on the advice of RIF that there was majority support for the legislative proposals in Sir Michael's report, my right hon. Friend has announced that he intends to publish detailed consultation documents on these matters. The majority of the Latham report recommendations are, however, directed at others and we have been active in urging all parts of the industry to address those recommendations.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward legislation on construction standards. [18055]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Amendments to part L and part F of the building regulations will come into effect on 1 July 1995.

Consultations on possible amendments to part M are currently under way.

My right hon. Friend hopes to issue consultation papers shortly on the legislative proposals in Sir Michael Latham's report "Constructing the Team" HMSO: July 1994.

Telecommunications Development Planning Guidance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning guidance he issues regarding (a) increasing the number of and (b) the positioning of electricity, radio and telephone (i) tower construction and (ii) overhead pylons in the open countryside; and if he will make a statement. [17895]

Sir Paul Beresford: Planning advice on telecommunications development is given in planning policy guidance note 8, "Telecommunications", December 1992, which was supplemented in 1994 by a circular letter to local planning authorities on the prior approval procedure for the appearance and siting of radio masts of up to 15m in height. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

On electricity pylons, all proposed overhead lines in England and Wales, apart from those to supply individual properties and a few other minor developments, require the consent of the President of the Board of Trade under the Electricity Act 1989. Department of the Environment circular 14/90 explains the procedure which electricity supply companies have to follow before putting up an overhead line.

Environmental Reporting and Disclosure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department was represented at the meeting on guidelines for environmental reporting and disclosure by multinational companies sponsored by the United Nations conference on trade and development, held in Geneva on 13 to 17 March; and if he will obtain a copy of the report of the meeting and place it in the Library. [17884]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department of Trade and Industry arranges representation at UNCTAD's intergovernmental working group of experts on international standards of accounting and reporting. The UK delegate to the sessions on environmental reporting at ISAR's meeting on 13 to 17 March was Professor Keith Maunders of the university of Hull. I will arrange for a copy of the report of the meeting, when it is available, to be placed in the Library.

Electrical Contracting Industry

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the electrical contracting industry. [18058]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is our policy to help the electrical contracting industry succeed in its domestic and overseas markets.

Bristol Development Corporation

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons Argent Estates gave for withdrawal from the Bristol development corporation's Quay point development; and if he will make a statement. [18066]

Sir Paul Beresford: Bristol development corporation informed my Department that Argent Group had decided to withdraw its interest in the development of Quay point.

The reasons for this withdrawal are a matter for the company.

Climate Change Programme

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment if he has revised the carbon savings target he set for "The Energy Savings Trust in Climate Change—the UK Programme". [17971]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to him on 28 March, Official Report, column 605. The trust is currently reviewing its plans. It estimates that the programme of activities already established and financed will save about 0.3 million tonnes of carbon in the year 2000. Further schemes will make additional contributions, but they are not yet established. The Government are updating the carbon dioxide chapter of their climate change programme, and this will include an assessment of the likely contribution of energy efficiency. The Government will continue to reflect the key role of the trust, and the targets it sets itself, in the programme; but they will not set targets for the trust.

Earth Tremors, Stoke-on-Trent

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the extent and causes of recent earth tremors in Stoke-on-Trent. [17898]

Sir Paul Beresford: The extent of earth tremors in Great Britain is monitored by the British Geological Survey. Eleven separate small events were recorded at Stoke-on-Trent and one at Newcastle-under-Lyme between the 20 and 28 February, 1995. None of the existing monitoring instruments is located sufficiently close to the centre of the activity to determine the cause. It is not proposed to install additional monitoring equipment since, while this might identify the origin of subsequent tremors, if any occur, it would not identify unambiguously the cause of those which have taken place already.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers (a) he has and (b) other authorities have to investigate the causes of a house collapse at Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent; and if he will make a statement. [17888]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment has no responsibility to investigate the causes of a house collapse. While the local authority has powers to take action to secure public safety, in the event of an emergency, under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and the Building Act 1984, these powers do not extend to investigation of the causes of a house collapse. The secure and safe occupancy of a site is a matter for the landowner under the Occupiers' Liability Acts 1957 and 1984. The Coal Authority has responsibility, under the Coal Industry Act 1994, to have regard to securing the safety of members of the public in respect of hazards arising from the physical legacy of coal mining for which it has responsibility. This is in addition to the more specific responsibilities it has in the area of coal mining subsidence.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish an inquiry into possible links between earth tremors, former mining operations, and a house collapse in Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent. [17889]

Sir Paul Beresford: It would not be appropriate to establish an inquiry, since the Coal Authority is currently investigating this incident to determine whether there is any relationship to the physical legacy of coal mining.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many parliamentary questions requesting an ordinary written answer were received by his Department in each year since 1979–80; and how many such questions received a substantiative answer within 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18523]

(2) how many parliamentary questions to his Department in each year since 1979–80 requesting a priority written answer or answer on a named day, were answered within three days; how many received a holding reply; and how many of those which received a holding reply then received a substantive answer within a further five, 10, 15, 20 days or longer; [18524]

(3) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has given a reply to a parliamentary question which has resulted in the information requested being placed in the Library and not printed in the Official Report; [18525]

(4) how many times in each year since 1979–80 his Department has written to a right hon. or hon. Member correcting an answer to a parliamentary question; [18526]

(5) how many parliamentary questions to his Department were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence; [18527]

(6) how many parliamentary questions to his Department that were transferred for answer to the chief executive or other senior official of a non-departmental public body or agency for which he has responsibility received an answer which was not printed in the Official Report in each year since 1979–80 or for each year that the body or agency has been in existence. [18528]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is a matter of public record but it could be extracted only in the form requested at disproportionate cost.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when his Department became aware of Lambeth council's failure to finalise accounts for each relevant financial year between 1979 and financial year ended 1993; and on what date his Department took action in each case; [18402]

(2) what information his Department received as to the failure of Lambeth council to finalise accounts for any financial year between 1979 and financial year ended 1993; and what action his Department took in each case. [18405]

Mr. Curry: Local authorities are required, under regulation 6 of the Accounts and Audit Regulations 1983, SI 1761, to make up and balance accounts for each financial year by no later than six months after the end of that financial year; and, under regulation 15, to publish a statement of accounts no later than nine months after the end of the financial year. Failure to meet these deadlines is a matter for the local authority concerned and the district auditor. My Department is not involved.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when his Department first became aware of each audit report in the public interest that has been issued since 1979 with reference to Lambeth council; and what action his Department has taken in each case; [18407]

(2) what discussions his Department has had with the district audit service of the Audit Commission with respect to each audit report issued in the public interest on the subject of Lambeth council; and what action his Department has taken on each of them. [18404]

Mr. Curry: Since 1979, 10 public interest reports have been issued by the district auditor at Lambeth. The Department became aware of them as public documents. It is the responsibility of the audited body to respond to public interest reports, and to take any necessary action. The Department has no direct role in the process.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department first became aware of the contents of each management letter sent to Lambeth council since 1979; and what action his Department took in each case. [18403]

Mr. Curry: The management letter is not a public document, unless an authority chooses to make it so, and any consequent action is between the audited body and its appointed auditor. The auditor is prevented by law from disclosing to the Government or anyone else information obtained in the course of his or her duties.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates and nature of notices served on Lambeth council with reference to the management and accounts of the council direct labour organisation; and what was the response in each case. [18406]

Mr. Curry: On 22 March 1993, five notices were served on the authority for accounting deficiencies and failure to provide accounts. Overall, these notices covered building maintenance work, highway and sewer maintenance work, refuse collection, street cleaning, ground maintenance work, building cleaning and vehicle maintenance. Subsequently, four directions were issued to the authority on 23 July 1993. Their details are as follows:

Building maintenance; to re-tender all the work by 1 April 1994 and seek the consent from the Secretary of State before assigning any of the work to its direct labour organisation; a prohibition on carrying out housing maintenance work being undertaken by the private sector; a prohibition on carrying out work on non-educational public buildings; and a complete prohibition from carrying out the work from 1 July 1994 unless outstanding accounts were provided by 31 December 1993. The work was re-tendered in 63 contracts, the authority obtained consent to assign 12 contracts to its direct labour organisation in March 1994 and the accounts were supplied.

Highway and sewer maintenance—a prohibition on carrying out the work from 1 April 1994 except for winter emergency work.

Refuse collection and street cleaning—a complete prohibition on carrying out the work from 1 July 1994 unless outstanding accounts were provided by 31 December 1993. The accounts were provided and the direct service organisation continues to undertake the work.

Ground maintenance, building cleaning and vehicle maintenance—a complete prohibition on carrying out the work from 1 July 1994 unless outstanding accounts were provided by 31 December 1993. The accounts were provided and the direct service organisation continues to undertake the work.

On 28 February this year, two further notices were served on the authority for financial failure in respect of ground maintenance work and building cleaning in the year 1993–94. We have received the authority's responses and are considering whether to proceed to directions.

Water Industry

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the proportion of profits obtained by the privatised water industry which have been (a) retained for investment in its core business, (b) distributed to shareholders and (c) invested in businesses other than the provision of water and sewerage services. [18561]

Mr. Atkins: This information is published in the annual reports and accounts of the individual water companies.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether the Regulator of the Water Industry has adequately protected the consumer interest; and if he will make a statement. [18562]

Mr. Atkins: The Director General of Water Services, Mr. Ian Byatt, has a statutory duty to ensure that the functions of water and sewerage companies are properly carried out and that they are able to finance these functions. He must also protect customers' interests, promote economy and efficiency and facilitate competition where appropriate. Mr. Byatt has carried out these duties successfully and effectively.

Unitary Development Plans

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) to what extent draft unitary development plans should be taken account of in determining planning decisions and appeals; [18341]

(2) what guidance he gives to (a) local authorities and (b) inspectors with delegated powers, where planning applications or appeals run counter to draft unitary development plans but are to be determined before the development plan process is finalised; [18342]

(3) what action is open to local authorities where it appears that planning applications contrary to a draft unitary development plan are being submitted in an attempt to determine issues in advance of the UMP inquiry where this would have the effect of prejudging the inquiry. [18343]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department's policy is set out in paragraphs 32–34 of PPG1.

As far as possible, decisions should be taken in the light of current policies. However, it may be justifiable for a local planning authority to refuse planning permission when a development proposal raises matters that should be settled in the development plan context. The weight to be attached to a draft plan will increase as successive stages in the development plan process are reached, having regard to any conflicts with existing plans, and whether there are objections.

Prematurity cases call for careful judgment about the scale of the impact of the proposed development, and its significance in relation to the emerging development plan. The objective of our policy is to safeguard the development plan processes, while at the same time ensuring that development is not delayed without good cause.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what criteria he uses for deciding which planning appeals to delegate to inspectors; [18340]

(2) for what reasons he delegated to an inspector responsibility for the recent planning appeal at Oxclose farm, Sheffield. [18344]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Town and Country Planning Act 1990 transfers responsibility for determining appeals to planning inspectors unless the Secretary of State decides to intervene and recover jurisdiction. The criteria for recovering jurisdiction are set out in the Government's response to the fifth report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985–86, "Planning: Appeals, Call-In and Major Public Inquiries", Command 43. The proposal at Oxclose farm did not meet any of these recovery criteria. The appeal therefore remained to be determined by an inspector.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of whether the inspector's decision on the planning appeal at Oxclose farm, Sheffield, conforms to guidance notes PPG6 and PPG13; [18338]

(2) what assessment he has made of whether the introduction of guidance notes PPG6 and PPG13 in their current form made a difference to the outcome of the recent planning appeal at Oxclose farm, Sheffield. [18339]

Sir Paul Beresford: All inspectors are expected to take account of guidance notes PPG6 and PPG13 where they are relevant. It is established practice that I do not comment on individual cases.

Polling Organisations

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 March, Official Report, column 365, if he will list those polling organisations which have been employed by his Department and give in detail the research undertaken by those organisations. [18259]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information available is provided in the table below. The table lists all surveys of the public which were conducted in the two financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95 by external organisations employed by the Department of the Environment, and which included questions seeking public opinion.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the measures taken, facilities offered and adjustments made in his Department and agencies for which he is responsible to facilitate access for disabled people; what plans he has to improve access; and if he will make a statement. [18588]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department is committed to providing and improving access into and around its buildings for staff and visitors with disabilities. Where the physical characteristics of existing buildings allow, accommodation officers make arrangements to meet the specific needs of people with disabilities on advice from the departmental disabled persons officer.

Facilities already provided include wheelchair ramps, lifts with tactile buttons, car parking facilities and assistance where necessary. Induction loops are available for people with hearing difficulties and arrangements can also be made for sign language interpretation at meetings or interviews.

Green Policy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Minister attended when the green Ministers last met; which items were discussed; when they will next meet; and what items are on the agenda for that meeting. [18657]

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I attended the last meeting in December 1994.

The items discussed were:

the UK annual report 1995: "This Common Inheritance" (now published, Cm 2822), the town and country quality initiative, the Royal Commission on environmental pollution report on transport and the environment and the proposed rural White Paper. The UK round table on sustainable development and departmental green housekeeping strategies were also discussed.

A further meeting will be held shortly and the agenda is presently being considered.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the green Minister for his Department and list (a) the green initiatives taken by that Minister in respect of the Department's functions, (b) the representations made by the Minister in respect of functions carried out by other Departments and (c) the input made by the Minister into consultations on the Environment Bill. [18639]

Mr. Gummer: I am the principal green Minister for the Department of the Environment, but all my ministerial colleagues share our common objective of promoting sustainable development in all areas of national life.

"Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy", Cm 2426, presented to Parliament by the Prime Minister in January 1994, set out our overall approach to these issues, and lists large numbers of individual initiatives, objectives and targets. Progress on these has been reported more recently in "This Common Inheritance 1995", Cm 2822, published last month. Paragraphs 1.9 to 1.12 of that report list the following nine areas to which we are giving high priority this year together with the following priority aims for each one:

Climate Change: to review the objectives and measures in the UK's climate change programme, and to consider how it should be extended beyond 2000 so as to make an appropriate UK contribution to the global effort.

Air Quality: to implement an effective strategy for improving general levels of local air quality and for managing episodes of poor air quality on the basis of the strategic policies set out in "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge".

Freshwater and the Sea: to maintain and where appropriate improve the quality of UK drinking water, rivers and bathing and coastal waters; and to participate constructively in European negotiations on the further improvement of drinking water (including on the issue of lead) and surface waters, and the protection of groundwater; while taking carefully into account what water consumers and others can reasonably afford.

Biodiversity: to develop the UK's biodiversity action plan into an effective programme for the protection of habitats and species, with specific costed targets for key habitats and species.

Fish stocks: to examine options for improving the EC common fisheries policy taking account of the advice of the Government's panel on sustainable development, and to reflect on its recommendation for the establishment of an intergovernmental panel on the oceans;

Waste: to carry forward public consultations on a new waste management strategy which would encourage everyone firstly to reduce waste and then to reuse or recycle, or recover energy in preference to disposing of waste, and to seek Parliament's approval for statute-based producer responsibility schemes for the reuse, recovery or recycling of products and materials.

Rural Development: in preparing rural White Papers for England and Scotland to take a fresh look at economic, social and environmental policies which impact on rural areas.

The Built Environment: to improve the quality of the built environment, to raise awareness that good design matters and is affordable and to help ease development pressure in particular by taking forward ideas prompted by the quality in town and country initiative.

Transport: recognising that unconstrained traffic growth would have unacceptable consequences in terms of pollution, carbon dioxide production, noise and disturbance, to develop appropriate national and local strategies and measures for reducing the need to travel and to encourage more sustainable and environmentally acceptable patterns of transport—focusing particularly on the recommendations of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution.

The whole Government are committed to the objective of sustainable development and I am in regular contact with all my colleagues on the implications of this, including in particular the Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Foreign Secretary; the Home Secretary; the Secretary of State for Transport; the President of the Board of Trade; the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland.

I have taken the lead inside and outside Government in the preparations for the Environment Bill, and look forward to introducing it to the House of Commons shortly after Easter.

Social Index

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the net gain or loss in Liverpool arising from its position on the social index; and what were the corresponding figures for Westminster and Wandsworth. [18943]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The contributions of the combined economic and social indices to the 1995–96 standard spending assessments are:

Liverpool: £12.411 million;
Westminster: £20.290 million;
Wandsworth: £10.305 million;

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where Liverpool ranks on the social index; and what rankings are given to (a) Westminster, (b) Wandsworth, (c) Bath, (d) Brighton and (e) Norwich. [18942]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The ranking for the combined economic an social indices in 1995–96 are:

Liverpool 17
a) Westminster 12
b) Wandsworth 16
c) Bath 86
d) Brighton 29
e) Norwich 47

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how economic disadvantage is taken into account in the economic and social services standard spending assessment; what ranking Liverpool receives on the social index ; what ranking it receives on the index of local conditions; which of these is used to determine standard spending assessments; and what consideration he is giving to referring to both indexes in making the calculation. [18936]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The SSAs for personal social services includes an other social services index; the all other services district level SSA includes an economic index and social index. These two indices should be considered together. The constituents of these indexes are set out in the Local Government Finance Report, England, 1995–96.

In the social index alone, Liverpool has a ranking of 81. Liverpool has a ranking of 17th for the combined economic and social indices, and second for the authorities outside London. Liverpool ranks sixth in the index of local conditions. The economic and social indices are not comparable with the index of local conditions which is designed for a different purpose.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to remove the capping criteria on local government spending. [18237]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. Capping ensures that all authorities play their part in the restraint of public expenditure, and protects taxpayers from high council taxes. We have taken powers to reduce excessive budgets and excessive increases in budget and have made it clear that we will not hesitate to use them should it prove necessary to do so.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average standard spending assessment in England over the last two years; what is the figure in Liverpool; what is the Liverpool standard spending assessment as an average per head of population; what is the corresponding figure for inner London boroughs; and what is the average standard spending assessment per head of population in Tower Hamlets and Hackney. [18941]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The figures requested are shown below:

	1994–95	1995–96
Standard spending assessment for England (£ per head)	£782	£798
Standard spending assessment for Liverpool	£419m	£423m
Standard spending assessment for Liverpool (£ per head)	£875	£887
Average standard spending assessment for inner London boroughs (£ per head)	£1,090	£1,141
Standard spending assessment for Tower Hamlets (£ per head)	£1,481	£1,535
Standard spending assessment for Hackney (£ per head)	£1,305	£1,295

Notes

The figures have not been adjusted for changes in function. The £ per head figures for England are not comparable with those for Liverpool or London authorities primarily because of the inclusion in the former of SSA elements for police and fire.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultation takes place with local government before the annual standard spending assessment formula is determined; and if he will make it his policy to publish information requested by local government about next year's standard spending assessment before the consultation period has been completed; [18937]

(2) how many local authorities came to see Ministers this year about the standard spending assessment; and what changes to the standard spending assessment methodology have been proposed as a result of the meeting with those authorities. [18938]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There are annual discussions with the local authority associations in the local government finance settlement working group. In particular, a technical sub-group of officials from the associations and relevant Government Departments meets approximately 10 to 12 times between March and September each year to consider possible changes in methodology. An annual report of this sub-group's work is published and discussed at the consultative council on local government finance, which is chaired by my right hon. Friend. In December, provisional standard spending assessments are published and sent to all local authorities together with an explanation of any proposed changes in methodology and the underlying data which has been used. There is a formal period of consultation during which local authorities may make representations. In the light of this consultation, final standard spending assessments are calculated and sent to local authorities.

The information which is provided to local government at all the key stages in the annual cycle is discussed with the local authority associations. Wherever practicable, we seek to meet local authority requests for information.

Department of the Environment Ministers met 90 delegations from local authorities during consultation on the provisional local government finance settlement. In addition, nine police authorities had meetings with Home Office Ministers. As a result of representations made during consultation, there was only one methodology change, concerning the application of the area cost adjustment within the police formula, but a number of the issues raised will be examined in the next settlement and have been included in the programme of the technical sub-group mentioned above.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the ratio between the change in the level of resources provided through the area cost adjustment over the last year and (a) the level of inflation and (b) overall changes in the standard spending. [18947]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The total contribution of the area cost adjustment to standard spending assessments rose by 7.9 per cent. between 1994–95 and 1995–96. In 1994–95, however, the SSA for the receiver for the Metropolitan police was based on his budget. This included those extra costs which, from 1995–96, are reflected in the area cost adjustment. Excluding these, the increase in the total area cost adjustment contribution was 1.3 per cent. This compares with an overall increase in SSAs between 1994–95 and 1995–96 of 2.4 per cent. The projected increase in the GDP deflator for 1995–96 is 3.25 per cent.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reserves were held by each county council at 31 March 1994 under the headings (a) the reserves for local management of schools, (b) earmarked reserves, (c) free balances and (d) total reserves.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on Monday 13 March, Official Report, column 421. No further breakdown into earmarked reserves and free balances is available.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the values at the end of each financial year since 1985 for each of the North Yorkshire district councils. [18814]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: For districts in North Yorkshire, average right-to-buy values are given below, in £s for each financial year, before any discount:

	1985–86	1986–87	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Craven	19,071	20,643	20,938	25,222	32,583	45,488	41,135	39,633	39,775
Hambleton	19,151	21,794	23,624	29,956	39,790	46,972	45,747	45,474	n/a
Harrogate	17,709	20,420	20,830	24,659	34,086	42,210	43,361	41,910	41,715
Richmondshire	19,245	20,593	21,957	26,104	30,503	37,288	41,856	40,079	38,204
Ryedale	19,810	21,878	22,658	27,928	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Scarborough	19,557	19,877	20,137	24,173	32,310	38,028	39,939	43,448	41,042
Selby	19,600	20,600	21,800	23,997	31,212	31,940	38,625	41,165	41,075
York	19,418	20,802	22,537	27,161	39,035	43,627	43,809	42,522	40,938

Average right–to–buy prices represent the values of dwellings that have been sold and may not be representative of the stock still in council ownership. They represent a measure of vacant possession value rather than tenanted market value. Some values in the table are not available because data is no longer collected following the authority's transfer of dwellings to a housing association.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further consideration he is giving to the appointment of a trouble shooter to spearhead the objective 1 programmes on Merseyside. [18935]

Sir Paul Beresford: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cities in Great Britain are in receipt of objective 1 funding; and what account is taken of this designation in determining standard spending assessments. [18940]

Sir Paul Beresford: Within Great Britain the only city eligible for funding from the European Commission under objective 1 is Liverpool.

The receipt of EC assistance is not taken into account in assessing the standard spending assessments of local authorities.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the effect of the standard spending assessment on Liverpool's ability to identify funds to match against proposed objective 1 scheme; and what impact this is having on the city's ability to gain access to the objective 1 grants available. [18934]

Sir Paul Beresford: Standard spending assessments are the Government's assessment of what revenue local authorities need to spend in order to provide a common level of service. There is no direct relationship between SSAs and the ability of an area to match EC grants which are predominantly grants towards capital expenditure.

Matching funding for such grants is available from a variety of sources including domestic public expenditure programmes, UDCs, TECs, and the private and voluntary sectors as well as from local authorities' own resources.

Wildlife Controls

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to increase the use of DNA testing in the enforcement of wildlife controls. [18835]

Sir Paul Beresford: In my announcement of 20 December, Official Report, columns 1115-16 I promised to keep the House advised of the developments in the use of DNA tests.

The results of research commissioned by the Department and recent successful prosecutions based on DNA evidence have demonstrated the effectiveness of DNA testing as an aid to the enforcement of wildlife controls. We are therefore taking a number of steps to promote and extend its use as part of our commitment to improving the protection of threatened species.

We have today written to all police chief constables in Great Britain giving information about DNA testing, outlining the ways in which it can assist in the investigation of possible offences, and providing advice on its practical application. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library of the House. My Department is commissioning a study to establish what further guidance and other practical assistance we should provide on testing standards and procedures in this field.

We have allocated £40,000 to finance selective DNA tests to be commissioned by the Department's wildlife inspectorate. The results will provide a means of verifying the information held on the existing bird registration database.

On 20 July, I announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), Official Report, column 319, that my Department had funded research on the use of DNA testing to identify the parentage of birds. The results of this research are set out in Nottingham university's report "Genetic Variation in Birds of Prey—Phase IV", copies of which were placed in the Library of the House in December last year. As part of this project, the university has developed a number of genetic probes—"single locus probes"—which can be used to analyse blood samples, and greatly simplify the process of DNA fingerprinting. I hope that other laboratories will soon be in a position to use these probes to undertake DNA tests on wildlife to assist in the investigation of possible offences.

The Department also proposes to commission research into the scope for simplifying tests, and using genetic material such as feathers rather than blood.

The Department's working group to review the enforcement of wildlife controls—which I announced on 20 December in my reply to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), Official Report, column 1115-16—is examining the use of DNA tests and the application of other forensic methods. The group will submit its recommendations to me by the end of July.

Substandard Properties, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties in (a) the council sector and (b) the private sector in Liverpool are classified as substandard dwellings. [18946]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities are requested to provide information on dwellings in their area which are unfit—that is, fail to meet all the fitness criteria in section 83 of schedule 9 of the 1989 Local Government and Housing Act—in their annual housing investment programme returns.

The latest available data relate to 1 April 1994, at which time Liverpool reported 3,393 unfit local authority dwellings in its area—8 per cent. of total stock—and 18,000 unfit private sector dwellings—excluding housing association dwellings; 15 per cent. of total stock. The private sector figure is based on a sample survey carried out in 1992.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to meet the representative bodies for the housing co-operative movement to discuss funding and strategy for the housing co-operative sector; [18839]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the views of tenants in housing co-operatives are adequately represented to Government. [18840]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: While there are no current plans to meet the representative bodies for the housing co-operative movement, I will be accepting the invitation from the all-party group on housing co-operatives, on behalf of the Minister for Housing, for a meeting to discuss funding and strategy. Tenants of housing co-operatives can of course feed their views into that group, as well as passing them on directly to the Housing Corporation or to Government.

Council Housing

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were held by each of the district authorities in North Yorkshire at the end of each financial year since 1979. [18815]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities report the numbers of dwellings they own in their annual housing investment programme returns. The figures for 1979 to 1994 for each district in North Yorkshire can be found in the "HIP1 All Items Print" for those years, copies of which are in the Library.

The references of the relevant columns in prints for 1979 to 1993 are as follows:

1979 : B11
1980 to 1990 : A11
1991 to 1993 : A11 and A16

For 1994 the figures can be found in section A of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print".

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the values of disposals of council-owned property by each of the North Yorkshire district authorities for each financial year since 1990. [18817]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested, as reported by each of the district authorities in North Yorkshire, is as follows. The figures for council house purchase are based on the values of dwellings without subtracting the value of mortgage lending by local authorities.

Capital receipts from the sale of council dwellings in North Yorkshire (excluding lending for council house purchase)

£ thousand

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require Cherwell district council to consult further with its tenants before he considers any further proposals for the transfer of any of its housing to another landlord. [18777]

Mr. Curry: Whether the council should be required to carry out further consultation with its tenants is a matter which would need to be considered only when the council submitted an application for the Secretary of State's consent to transfer housing to a new landlord. No application from the council is before the Secretary of State.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of all tenants of Cherwell district council voted (a) in favour and (b) against the proposed transfer of their homes to another landlord when they were consulted on this option. [18776]

Mr. Curry: In March 1994, separate ballots were held in the Banbury area and the rest of the district, and in each area the tenants were asked two questions. On the question whether they were in favour of the council transferring all its homes in their area to a new housing association, 31.4 per cent. of the tenants, taking the district as a whole, voted for transfer and 47.5 per cent. voted against. On the question whether they were in favour of their own homes transferring to a new housing association even if a majority of the tenants in their area decided to stay with the council, 27.6 per cent. of the tenants, taking the district as a whole, voted for transfer and 49.2 per cent. voted against.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the impact of the delay of the proposed transfer of housing from Cherwell district council to the Cherwell Valley housing association on the housing revenue account in Cherwell district in 1995–96. [18778]

Mr. Curry: I understand that Cherwell district council has decided to increase the rents of its remaining houses by an average of £1.62 a week in 1995–96, which is below the Department's HRA subsidy rent guideline of £1.82 a week.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold in each financial year since 1982 by each of the district authorities in North Yorkshire. [18816]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Tables showing the available information on the volume of total council house sales for each English local authority for every financial year since 1980 and a cumulative total to March 1994 are in the Library.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the total allocation to housing co-operatives by the Housing Corporation in 1995–96 reflects the proportion of the total Housing Corporation allocation that housing co-operatives were targeted to achieve in the Housing Corporation's Co-operatives strategy published in 1993; what steps he is taking to increase the funding to housing co-operatives; and if he will make a statement. [18838]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The total allocation for development made by the Housing Corporation to housing co-operatives in 1995–96 will be some £9.5 million. The corporation's co-operatives strategy made it clear that target investment levels were subject to co-operatives gaining funding on the same criteria as other housing associations. All housing associations including co-operatives bid for allocations from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme on a competitive basis. The successful bids are those which meet the priority needs identified by local authorities in their housing strategies, on the most cost-effective basis.

Pesticides

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department has taken to (a) reduce the use of agriculture pesticides and (b) set national pesticide reduction standards. [18875]

Mr. Atkins: It is the Government's policy to minimise the use of pesticides through the rigorous approval and review of products, through guidance to users and through research and development. Targets for reducing emissions of certain pesticides to the marine environment have been agreed by the international conferences on the protection of the North sea.

Anti-social Behaviour (Council Estates)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to help local authorities to tackle anti-social behaviour on council estates; and whether he will make a statement. [18837]

Mr. Curry: My Department has issued today a consultation paper on proposals to introduce a system of probationary tenancies for new tenants on council estates. Copies have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

Under these proposals, local authorities will be able, if they wish, to put new tenants on probation for a year. Authorities exercising this discretion will have to give probationary tenancies to all their new tenants. If tenants complete their probation satisfactorily, their tenancies will be converted into secure tenancies. If, however, tenants do not behave responsibly their authority will be able to terminate their tenancy at any time during the probationary period by serving a notice to quit.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting separately on these proposals.

Pollution Report

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish the findings of the advisory committee for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. [18836]

Mr. Atkins: My Department is publishing the committee's interim report today. I am grateful to members of the committee for producing a useful and timely report. They have suggested a challenging set of recommendations for the inspectorate to improve further its capabilities as an efficient and effective organisation in the run-up to the creation of the Environment Agency. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has responded positively to the committee's views. I am today placing a copy of both the report and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution substantive response to the recommendations in the Library of the House.

Local Plan Process

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to respond to the consultation paper entitled "Improving the Local Plan Process", published in March 1994. [18976]

Sir Paul Beresford: The local plan process needs to operate more responsively and efficiently. There must be sound, up-to-date plans in place, capable of speedy review, if the plan-led system is to work well. The Government's aim is:

(i) in the short term, to give more impetus to current plan preparation, in order to achieve the maximum practicable area wide local plan coverage by the end of 1996; and

(ii) in the longer term, to speed up the entire process, so that local authorities are not discouraged from reviewing and updating existing plans because it is too time consuming and costly.

The consultation paper prompted over 300 responses, which we have carefully considered.

We are already implementing the straightforward proposals, such as those concerned with the better management of the process, in liaison with the local authorities associations and the Planning Inspectorate agency. The inspectorate is taking forward a number of initiatives, such as shorter inspectors' reports, the use of assistant inspectors and the development of advisory services.

In addition, we propose to introduce shortly:

(i) revised planning policy guidance, providing for local planning authorities to carry out more effective consultation on their plans at the pre-deposit stage; and

(ii) substantial revision of the Department's published code of practice on local plan inquiries, with the aim of helping planning authorities to manage the entire plan-making process more effectively and economically.

External Finance Limits

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes were made to the external financing limits for the urban development corporations, Urban Regeneration Agency, housing action trusts and docklands light railway in 1994–95. [19337]

Mr. Curry: External finance limits were increased by £1,250,000 from £90,715,000 to £91,965,000 for the housing action trusts, by £500,000 from £7,000,000 to £7,500,000 for Birmingham Heartlands development corporation and by £1,500,000 from £116,806,000 to £118,306,000 for the Urban Regeneration Agency. The external finance limit of the docklands light railway was reduced by £500,000 from £38,900,000 to £38,400,000. The remaining increases were met from identified savings on the urban programme.

Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the jobs that have been lost to agencies in his Department in the past two years that have (a) been taken over by contractors and (b) disappeared. [18324]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 4 April 1995]: The Department of the Environment contains five agencies—the Planning Inspectorate, the Building Research Establishment, the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre, the Buying Agency and the Securities Facilities Executive. The Planning Inspectorate's work is demand led and the agency has reduced its staffing level in line with falling appeals. No jobs have been contracted out or functions ceased. The Building Research Establishment has entered into a partnership agreement with a private firm to undertake its publications business. Four staff transferred to the new company and three others left the BRE. A number of staff transferred within BRE as part of a consequential reorganisation. The total number of staff employed by the BRE is dependant on the income it is able to generate. Staff numbers in the other three agencies have increased in the past two years to meet operational needs.

The Secretary of State is also responsible for the Ordnance Survey, where staff numbers have been reduced by 278 in the past two years. Only two posts were taken over by contractors. The other lost posts are the net effect of changes in operational activities and efficiency gains.

Local Inquiries

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the decision to hold the BNP bookshop inquiry at Crayford town hall; and if he will make a statement. [17796]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 3 April 1995]: The provision of information on public local inquiries is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. David Evennett, dated 31 March 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION NO. 117796/95/96

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the representations he has received about the decision to hold the BNP bookshop inquiry at the Crayford Town Hall.

In all, six representations have been received. Three were addressed to the Secretary of State, and all were referred to the Planning Inspectorate for reply.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 257

SESSION 1994–95

20th March—5th April 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc. under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
